SECRET REPORT QUERIED

Heavy Layoff Scare Hits Forest Industry

A report commissioned by the provincial government indicates as many as 7,500 coastal forest workers could be laid off over the next 10 years unless company profits increase, a spokesman for Pemberton Securities said today.

This would be nearly 25 per cent of the numbers now employed.

The report, which has not been made public by the government, says companies face high costs in converting existing sawmills to handle smaller timber and in constructing new pulp mills, which cost upwards of $300 million each.

Content of the report was made public by Liberal leader Grodon Gibson Wednesday but he said as many as 15,000 of the 30,000 coastal woodworkers could be laid off.

A Pemberton spokesman today said the figure should probably be about 7,500.

The layoffs would come unless forest companies could generate more funds than they currently earn in order to finance plant expansion.

Both Gibson and Jack Munro, regional president of the International Woodworkers of America, were critical today of what they termed the "secrecy" surrounding the report.

"If this is a dire picture of the forest industry, we needed to be working on it yesterday," the Liberal leader said.

Gibson said he doesn't object to the government getting Pemberton to do the report but said the claim by Economic Development Minister Don Phillips that the report will not be made public because it contains confidential financial data on forest firms is nonsense.

He said when Pemberton prepared its submission to the Pearse forestry commission the companies involved were not identified.

Munro said he is disturbed about the timing of the "leak" on the report — shortly before negotiations between the IWA and the forest industry are slated to start.

However, Ian Barclay, president of British Columbia Forest Products Ltd. today told the Times his company shares some of the concerns expressed in the Pemberton report but does not plan layoffs.

He said his company has, in fact, hired 1,000 additional employees over the past 12 months and now has a total staff of 6,000.

"We expect to have at least 6,000 employees five years from now, assuming that markets continue to be favorable. We cannot make projections beyond that date.

Pat Hrushowy, public affairs director for the B.C. Council of Forest Industries, also expressed surprise at the report of 7,500 layoffs as a possibility for the coastal industry.

"We have never heard projections of layoffs of that magnitude in our discussions with forest companies. I have not read the Pemberton report, however."

The IWA leader said it is just another example of the

★ BCR Faces $1B Debt?

VANCOUVER (CP) — An unnamed cabinet minister says the provincial cabinet has been told B.C. Railway will need $1 billion in capital in the next five years, according to the Vancouver Sun.

The cabinet minister said this is one of the major reasons for the decision by Premier Bill Bennett to appoint a royal commission into all facets of the Crown-owned railway.

The cabinet minister said another option for BCR would be its sale to Canadian National Railways.

No details were given on the capital expenditures.

The cabinet source said the government is concerned that the vast expenditures by BCR that are anticipated in development of northern B.C. should be justified. Interest on the $1 billion which would have to be borrowed over the next five years — beginning

See $1B BCR, Page 8.

The controversial M.E.L. Paving case will likely not come before the royal commission inquiry into B.C. Railway's operations, the commission chairman said Wednesday.

Mr. Justice Lloyd McKenzie, one of three commissioners appointed by the cabinet, said the inquiry's primary purpose is to determine whether the BCR is operating in a viable fashion and achieving its objectives.

The M.E.L. case would sidetrack the commission's work, he said.

Mr. Justice MacKenzie also said he can't see the M.E.L. Paving case as meeting the allegations of fraud that have been made, but if it should prove relevant to the commission investigation it will be included.

The judge also said the commission is prepared to call on anyone in comection with the investigation. This would include such figures as former premier W. A. C. Bennett.

NDP MLA Bill King told the legislature Wednesday the M.E.L. case should specifically be included in the terms of refence for the royal commission to make sure it doesn't get left out.

He also said that one of the commissioners, Sydney Welch, is a member of the Social Credit party and questioned whether the public would regard him as impartial.

Welch confirmed he is a member of the party, but said he was chosen because of his background in construction and labor. Welch is president of Premier Cablevision.

King also charged that the third commissioner, Dave Chapman, had told a radio station that he (Chapman) doubted the commission would look into M.E.L.

But the radio station later reported that Chapman had said only that the M.E.L. court case as such wouldn't be reviewed, although the M.E.L. situation in general would be thoroughly aired.

In an interview Wednesday in Victoria, Economic Development Minister Don Phillips said the former NDP government made a settlement with a contractor on cost over-runs which ultimately cost BCR almost $10 million.

Phillips said that on Dec. 10, 1975 — the day before the last provincial general election — the NDP government made a deal involving extra payments to Keen Industries Ltd. and a subsidiary, K. R. M. Construction, both of Edmonton.

The minister said the deal — for moving materials and for increases in the contracted price of future work — was identical to the circumstances surrounding the railway's settlement with M.E.L. Paving.

"It was the same kind of contract, the same specifications, the same terminology, they were faced with the same over-runs, the same inflation," said Phillips. "Why do they (the NDP opposition) say there was fraud with M.E.L. and settle with Keen? If there was fraud with M.E.L. there was fraud with Keen, too."

Phillips said that minutes of

Cabbie, Passenger Killed

A 19-year-old Colwood taxi driver and his 58-year-old passenger were killed early today in a two-car collision at the intersection of Millstream and the Trans-Canada Highway.

Three persons in the other car escaped with minor injuries.

The passenger was identified as Gustav Niclaus Becker, of 2110 Millstream.

Police said the taxi was crossing Millstream at 1:30 a.m. when it was hit broadside by a vehicle driven by Dennis Sharpe, 17, of Duncan.

When police arrived, the taxi was against a light standard on the northeast corner of the intersection and the car in a ditch nearby.

Police said Becker and the cab driver were pronounced dead on arrival at Victoria General Hospital.

Sharpe, and two passengers in his car, Ronald Boxem, 18, of Mill Bay, and Charles Harrison, 19, of Cowichan Station, were taken to Victoria General Hospital where they are reported in good condition.

Police said Sharpe suffered broken ribs, Boxem, broken teeth and cuts, and Harrison a slight concussion and possible broken jaw.

'Vigilante' Fund Set To Curb Hold-Ups

By DON VIPOND
Times Staff

The Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce is starting a fund to reward people who help capture crooks in what is shaping up as a "vigilante" effort to curb a spree of hold-ups.

First to benefit will be three boys who caught a man trying to rob a Colwood store Tuesday night. The chamber will reward them with $50 each.

Chamber president Alan Emery said today members will be asked for donations. Most people are concerned about the number of such crimes in Greater Victoria recently and the fact there are not enough policemen around to protect everybody, he said.

There have been 18 hold-ups or attempted hold-ups in the Capital district so far this year, far above average.

Tuesday night Kevin Gilbertson, 16, held a would-be robber at bay by threatening him with a karate chop while two friends ran for police. Kevin admited later he didn't know any karate moves.

Morris Armand Dupuis 37, living in a Colwood trailer court, pleaded guilty in court Wednesday to robbery and will be sentenced next month.

An officer said later police would never advise trying what the boys did but the trio could certainly not be faulted for their courage. It turned out that Dupuis was unarmed.

The idea for the reward fund comes from buiness-man Sidney Kovnats who said he will be happy to contribute the first $50.

"Little old staid Victoria is getting to be quite a rough town . . . people are saying, 'what's going on?'" he said.

He said businessmen working together "almost like a vigilante group" would support such a fund and be "good neighbors to the police."

Kovnats said he understands such a fund was started by the public in Phoenix and cut the crime rate.

People are interested in helping, they just don't know how to go about it, he said.

"I'm sure every business will contribute, even if it's only a couple of bucks. Right now everyone's scared out of their wits."

Double Rescue Saves 5, Dog

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Five men and a dog aboard a sinking tug were saved today in a two-stage rescue operation.

Initially saved were four men.

But rescue officials were called back to the tug after a radio report indicated there was yet another man aboard.

It turned out there was — but the man, and a dog, had climbed aboard the still afloat tug after his nearby fishing vessel went down.

The action began at 2 a.m. when a May Day call was received from the New Westminster tug Mainland Fury.

The message said there were four men aboard and that the engine had failed. The seas were heavy and the crew of the 38-foot wooden tug had cut its tow — a barge carrying heavy logging equipment.

The helpless tug was wallowing in seas on the west side of Calvert Island, about 40 miles north of Vancouver Island.

The Pacific Rescue Co-ordination Centre alerted the Prince Rupert-based ministry of transport buoy tender Alexander Mackenzie and the B.C. ferry Queen of Prince Rupert.

The ferry reported she was only 50 minutes away from the tug. She rescued the four crewmen who were taken, unharmed, to Kelsey Bay.

But fears that not all the crew had been rescued were raised at 7:50 a.m. when the Alert Bay radio station reported there was another man aboard the hulk of the tug, radioing for help.

The rescue centre issued a general marine broadcast to which the train transport Alaska, on a run between Alaska and Vancouver, responded.

The Alaska soon reported she could see a man aboard the crippled tug but doubted, because of the angry seas, that she would be able to rescue him.

The rescue, however, was finally carried out. Rescued was Roger Skidmore, who with his dog, was alone in his 26-foot fishing vessel, the Diana Gay, when the vessel began sinking.

Skidmore and his dog dove over the side and swam to the tug.

DEADLY GERMS FOR SALE

LONDON (Reuter) — A British government research centre is offering deadly germs for sale by the kilogram (2.2 pounds) to anyone who applies, an opposition member of Parliament alleged Wednesday.

Michael Shersby told reporters he will question ministers in the House of Commons concerning an advertisement, in the magazine Nature, headed "bacteria by the kilogram . . . to any destination" from the Porton Down research centre in England's southern Wiltshire region.

He said he will ask whether the government is satisfied the bacteria wil not fall into the hands of "terrorists."

The advertisement, in the magazine's December issue, asked about $260 for 100 grams (3.5 ounces) of haemophilus influenza and $111 for a kilogram of eschericia coli. A Pharmaceutical Society spokesman has described them as "highly toxic."

Other items in the advertisement simply were described as "especially toxic proteins."

MPs GAS THEMSELVES

John Reynolds (left) and Ken Robinson squirted the gas which is used to calm prisoners and, at the end of the demonstration found that their eyes were sore and streaming.

Use of the gas, in the amount claimed necessary, is excessive, they said.

PQ Urged To Abolish English

QUEBEC CITY (UPI) — A French organization claiming a million members has urged the separatist Parti Quebecois government to abolish all English-language rights in the province except in education.

The proposal was submitted to the government Wednesday by the Mouvement Quebec Francais.

It asked the government to abolish parts of the British North America Act that guarantee the right to use English in the National Assembly, Quebec's legislature, and in the courts. The rights have been in effect since 1867 under the BNA, Canada's constitution.

The MQF urged the government to create a new law, which could not be amended, making French the official language of Quebec. Such a law would officially entrench French as the language of government, business and work.

The brief was submitted to Cultural development Minister Camille Laurin, who is drafting a new language policy. Laurin is expected to present new language legislation to replace Bill 22, the current law.

B.C. Milk Board Creaming Consumers

VANCOUVER — Milk drinkers are being creamed by the B.C. Milk Board, according to two Simon Fraser University professors, because of the board's tight control over prices.

In their book, The Real Cost of the B.C. Milk Board, Herbert Grubel and Richard Schwindt say the board is to blame because:

—Milk costs more in Vancouver than anywhere else in urban Canada and more than in any of the major Pacific Coast U.S. cities.

—The cost per quart is rising faster here than in those places.

—It is tough for new farmers to become established in the dairy business.

The book says marketing boards, "like any cartel, are able artificially to maintain prices above the free market level by restricting the supply of the product . . ."

(Comparative retail prices for a quart of milk as of last November: Vancouver, 60.3 cents; Calgary, 53.5 cents; Regina, 51.5 cents; Seattle, 49.7 cents (in Canadian equivalents); Portland, 42.2 cents; Los Angeles, 42.5 cents.)

The restriction, they say is the quota system, a part of which is a prerequisite to membership in the "cartel."

They say farmers can become members of the board only by purchasing an existing quota. They put the price, for a "typical" farm with 50 cows, at up to $87,500.

They say the milk board in 1975 cost B.C. milk users $12 million in subsidies to farmers whose production is controlled by the board, and conclude that direct subsidization of needy farmers ("treating them just like the urban recipients of welfare relief") would be much cheaper and more efficient.

The authors claim that marketing boards, "by nature, are unlikely to serve the public interest" and that as a system for subsidizing the farm sector they are inequitable, inefficient and ineffective.

"The tax burden implicit in the higher prices that consumers must pay . . . falls on all consumers regardless of income (and) it is therefore a 'regressive' tax . . ."

The authors figure the time is ripe for dumping the milk board — and any other marketing boards.

Officials of the B.C. Milk Board said Wednesday they had not read the book and could not comment.

PM 'Too Busy' To Read Report

By IAIN HUNTER
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Conservative MPs demanded in the Commons Wednesday that the government take action against officers of a Canadian Crown corporation's Swiss subsidiary accused of unacceptable and possibly illegal business practices.

However, Prime Minister Trudeau said he was too busy to read the report of a special inquiry into the activities of Polysar Ltd.'s Swiss subsidiary which disclosed the unacceptable procedures.

The report to Polysar, the Crown-owned producer of synthetic rubber, plastics and petrochemicals, condemned the practices of Polysar International S.A. involving total rebates or similar payments to its customers and distributors since 1970.

On receiving the report, Polysar ordered the Swiss company to cease these practices immediately.

The report said that the procedures could have resulted in evasion of foreign exchange control regulations in many countries, tax evasion, defrauding of minority shareholders, and violation of prohibitions against currency transfers.

Commons public accounts committee chairman Allan Lawrence said the report also hinted that officers of the Crown subsidiary may have been enjoying similar windfall opportunities, and called for a full public inquiry by his committee.

In the House, James Gillies (PC—Don Valley) noted that the prime minister was alerted about the questionable transactions in 1973 and called on the government to inform other countries involved of the names of the companies taking part so that the foreign governments could take appropriate action.

Trudeau said it appears that foreign companies have broken laws in other countries and that no action can be taken against Canadian companies "if they did not act illegally or improperly."

Gillies argued that only the co-operation of a Canadian Crown Corporation allowed the foreign companies to break the law in their own countries.

The prime minister replied that he wants to be sympathetic "to the wave of purity" apparent among the Conservatives, but said he wanted to look at the facts before answering what he called a hypothetical question.

Lawrence, Conservative MP for Northumberland-Durham, noted that the report was hand delivered to Trudeau's office five hours before the Commons met, and that the prime minister should be able to answer questions about it.

Trudeau said he may be too busy to have read it by the time the House meets today but promised to do his best.

Finance Minister Donald Macdonald said that the Canada Development Corporation, which controls Polysar, may have to censure the officers of the company, but said he could not be sure until he has read the report.

OTTAWA ASSISTANCE NOT PASSED ON

Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm confirmed Wednesday that B.C. is not passing on an increase it is receiving from the federal government for pensions to the handicapped.

The money amounts to $22.50 a month for each handicapped person in the province.

Vander Zalm was replying in the legislature to questions asked last week by Liberal Leader Gordon Gibson.

The minister said the government periodically receives more money from Ottawa for various programs, but it does not make decisions on how much to pay various classes of recipients on that basis.

Decisions are made on the basis of needs of groups involved, he said, and the government is conducting a study of the needs of the handicapped.

4 IRA Bombers Jailed Total Of 600 Years

Times News Services

LONDON — Four gunmen of the Irish Republican Army who for 18 months waged a terror campaign of murder and bombing in England were sentenced today to life imprisonment 47 times over, and to additional prison terms totalling more than 600 years among them.

The four — Martin O'Connell, Edward Butler, Harry Duggan and Hugh Doherty — were found guilty Wednesday of 25 counts of murder and bombing.

The judge, Sir Joseph Cantlay, who at the start of the 13-day trial was told he was on the terrorists' death list, said the four should serve not less than 30 years each on the murder charges.

In Britain, a life sentence can be reviewed and shortened at any time by the home secretary, and judges frequently recommend the minimum time they feel should be served.

The convictions put the police on the alert for a new wave of bombing. One Scotland Yard officer reported: "We expect the IRA to hit back at any moment. . . . The terrorists have already publicly stated they plan a bombing campaign far worse than anything they have done before."

The four refused to enter pleas at the opening of the 13-day trial, which two of them called "a farce."

"We are at war with England," one of the defendants said.

They faced a total of 25 charges, including seven of murder and 14 involving bomb explosions.

They were blamed by the prosecution for a wave of terror bombings and shootings that disrupted life in the London area during late 1975.

Doherty, convicted on 18 charges, received 11 life sentences. The other three, each convicted on 20 charges, received 12 life sentences apiece.

B.C.-Wide Bargaining Sought

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Construction Labor Relations Association wants the provincial government to legislate province-wide bargaining councils for both employers and unions in the building industry.

The association, representing about 850 contractors in B.C., said in a brief to Labor Minister Allan Williams, that this is the only way to restore stability to the troubled industry, which had two strike-lockouts in 1976.

"The government has a responsibility to put legislated meat on the bones of the accreditation system in this province," said the brief, released Wednesday.

The association wants legislation which would enable it to represent all unionized firms in bargaining.

The government should also use existing legislation to create a common bargaining agent for union construction workers in the province, the association says.

The association also says that national or specialty contractors should operate under the same competitive conditions and legal requirements as provincial companies.

Hostage-Taker Studies State Immunity Offer

INDIANAPOLIS — Tony Kiritsis, who has held a real estate executive hostage in an apartment he says is rigged with dynamite since Tuesday morning, today said he was turning an offer of "complete and total" immunity over to three attorneys to decide if it is valid.

He said he would not make any move until the three attorneys, who he described as among the best in the country, had read the letter of immunity and told him it was legal and in proper form.

Kiritsis, 44, made the statement in a telephone call broadcast by radio station WIBC in which he also rattled off another series of complaints against the mortgage company controlled by Richard Hall, his hostage.

"I want vengeance — I want those people exposed," he said. Kiritsis contends the mortgage company cheated him.

"I'm not going to come out of here and go to jail," he said. "I want to live as long as any man who ever lived but I'm not afraid to die."

He said that Wednesday night he re-attached a shotgun to Hall's head because he had been upset by a broadcast report that a bomb squad might be preparing to rush his third-floor apartment.

"This man fell asleep and I fell asleep. We were wired together," Kiritsis said.

Deputy Marion county prosecutor George Martz announced Wednesday night that authorities had decided to go along with the immunity offer because "there was no other choice" if they hoped to get Hall out alive.

Meanwhile, a 27-year-old gunman who entered a suburban Washington bank and held eight persons hostage for no apparent reason surrended to police today.

The man, identified as Stephen Gregory, had fired several shots at police and threatened to kill himself after releasing the hostages. But when police entered the bank and told him to lay down the two high-powered rifles he was holding, he followed their instructions and surrendered peacefully.

Police charged Gregory with assault with intent to murder and said further charges would be filed against him later.

provincial government's policy of conducting all its business in secrecy.

Munro said, despite what the report says, statistics show that housing starts in the U.S., even with the bad weather, are up to the level of 1973, which was regarded as a particularly good year.

He said this would seem to be a good trend for the B.C. forest industry, which is very dependent on the U.S. market.

"The only way we can find out anything is if it is leaked," he said. "I don't know what the hell this government thinks it is doing to the people of the province. We are entitled to better treatment than this where everything is done in secrecy."

The Pemberton report expresses concern about the costs of expanding the pulp industry in particular and states:

"Most new (pulp) facilities today cost nearly $300 million, equivalent to around $800 per annual ton of capacity. This is 2.5 times the $300 per ton of annual capacity associated with building new pulp and paper facilities in the mid to late 1960s. If the forest products industry is to continue to be both self-financing and to maintain its efficiency, enough surplus cash must be generated over the life of the assets to provide for replacement at today's much higher costs."

Pemberton prepared a submission to the Pearse commission on the forest industry in 1976 and was subsequently asked by the department of economic development to elaborate in a separate report. This second report was delivered to the government in the fall but was never made public.

Economic Development Minister Don Phillips said the report could not be made public because it contained statistics from the forest industry companies which the government had agreed to keep confidential.

B.C. Forest's Barclay said that, if productivity increases and markets remain firm, employment could grow or at least remain stable in the forest industry.

He said he could not comment directly on the Pemberton report because he had not read it.

"I see no reason to expect there will be massive layoffs in the coastal industry, at least as far as our company is concerned. However, the public must become aware that we are facing increasing costs and there is a danger that we will not be able to recover enough revenue to meet these costs."

$40,000 Damage In Fire

A candle caused fire which resulted in about $40,000 damage to a duplex at 1713 Fernwood early today.

A Victoria fire department spokesman said Ray Pillon, 17, staying with friends in a basement suite, lit a candle in his bedroom and then went to another room to watch television. When he returned the room was engulfed in flame.

Pillon woke up his friends, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Scott, and the three made their way to safety.

Firemen were at the scene for more than two hours and had to chop through the roof to ventilate smoke and heat.

SPEC Grant Cut By 80%

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Society for Pollution and Environmental Control (SPEC) has had its provincial government grant cut by 80 per cent, a spokesman for the environmental group said Wednesday.

Gary Gallon, SPEC executive director, said the grant was reduced to $5,000 a year from $25,000 but the cutback will not result in any staff layoffs or deletion of existing SPEC programs. Research capability will be severely hampered.

Gallon also said SPEC received its 1976 grant only a few days ago. SPEC was shuffled for months from the provincial secretary's office, which handed out $25,000 two previous years, to the environment minister who first refused to give SPEC any money and then agreed to the reduced amount.

SPEC raised $20,000 through public donations last year when the provincial government first indicated that the grant would only continue with outside support.

Gallon said that all eight SPEC employees are working on federal work-incentive grants and therefore will not be laid off.

FLUSH LIMIT: 3½ GALLONS

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — A bill to limit toilet water use to 3½ gallons a flush was approved Wednesday night by an Oregon senate committee.

The proposed law would aply to toilets installed after Jan. 1, 1978. Violating the law would be a misdemeanor. It would be administered by the state building codes division.

The bill names hotels, motels, apartment houses and other dwellings, but does not name public buildings and industrial or commercial buildings.

Sponsor Senator Ted Hallock, (D — Portland), said research shows the average toilet uses from five to seven gallons a flush. A family of four will use 10,000 gallons of water annually in flushing toilets.

The average Oregonian flushes five times a day and 40 per cent of all household water is used for flushing toilets, Hallock said. It was estimated 58.5 million gallons of water is used every day for flushing toilets in Oregon which has 2.3 million people.

If only 3½ gallons were used each flush, the total could be reduced by 17.6 million gallons, Hallock said.

The proposed law would not apply if there are not enough approved low-flush toilets available on the market and if a builder's drainage system required more than 3½ gallons for adequate flushing.

U.S. Northwest Warned of Power Cuts

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Forecasts indicate there will not be enough water to meet normal electrical energy demands in the United States Pacific Northwest this summer, utility representatives were told Wednesday.

Merrill Schultz of the Northwest Power Pool Co-Ordinating Group told the representatives anticipated Columbia River runoff at The Dalles will fall short by 6.6 million acre feet or requirements.

"The situation has deteriorated considerably since Jan. 1," Schultz told representatives of public and private power companies and of state and federal agencies.

He said an earlier projection showed there would be enough water to meet regional power needs later this year but new forecasts indicate normal requirements may not be met.

He stopped short of making specific recommendations, saying individual states should decide on their own courses of action.

An unofficial Bonneville Power Administration proposal given the representatives at the meeting urged conservation of electricity now, especially at the industrial level, to ward off a crisis later.

Schultz said at a committee meeting in Seattle last month it was estimated the risk of energy declines at that time was not sufficient for a major voluntary conservation campaign.

He said although requirements are two to three per cent below estimates, they are seven to 10 per cent above last year's requirements.

He said while it will be up to the states to form their own conservation programs, he feels that suggestions from the Northwest Power Pool will be used as guidelines by most states.

★ RAIN DANCE PROTESTED

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The California drought prompted the San Francisco State University concert choir to schedule a Hopi Indian rain dance Wedensday.

But Indian students protested and the event was postponed pending further negotiations with the university Indian studies department and a Hopi Indian group.

Diana Ayers, spokeswoman for the choir, said the same dance was performed by the male chorus of the San Francisco Opera Company last year, and it rained the next day.

Greenpeace Pledges Seal War

MONTREAL (CP) — The Greenpeace Foundation says it will attempt to disrupt, harass and shut down operations of Canadian and Norwegian sealing ships to prevent the killing of "a significant proportion of the set quota of 170,000 seals" on Canada's eastern coast during the March seal hunt.

Greenpeace spokesman Paul Wilson told a news conference Wednesday that tactics to be used by the 30 volunteers will remain a well-guarded secret, but would be nonviolent.

In March, 1976, the federal government changed the Seal Protection Act, making tactics proposed by Greenpeace to block the seal hunt illegal. Before the amendments, proposed tactics were within the law, Greenpeace said.

Soviet Union Accused Of Trading with Rhodesia

Washington Post

UNITED NATIONS — The Soviet Union, the leading non-African supporter of guerrilla forces seeking to overthorw the white-minority government of Rhodesia, has been accused along with four other East European countries of conducting "regular trade" with Rhodesia in a "major sanctions-breaking operation."

The charge emerged in a limited-distribution annual report issued last month by the UN Security Council's committee to police economic sanctions against Rhodesia imposed by the United Nations in 1966.

The report was not distributed to the press.

The accusation, submitted to the UN Sanctions Committee by the British government in September, was one of four British diplomatic notes over the past year that have alleged specific trade relationships between Rhodesia and companies controlled by Soviet bloc governments.

Together, they indicate a broad pattern of sanctions-breaking by the Soviet bloc.

Failure of the UN sanctions against Rhodesia over the last decade has been generally acknowledged but previously most sanction-breaking had been laid to Werstern nations.

The Soviet Union has criticized the United States frequently for openly importing Rhodesian chrome, despite the UN ban.

The United Nations has often criticized the West for trading with Rhodesia but the documented British accusations represent the first hard evidence of Soviet and East European trade with Rhodesia.

The Soviet Union and Romania, both members of the sanctions committee, have denied the allegations while the other East European nations named — East Germany, Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria — have not replied.

Although the formal British notes do not explicitly accuse these nations of knowingly trading with Rhodesia, one diplomat on the committee said, "If they didn't know, it was because they hadn't asked the questions that they didn't want answered."

The major British allegation involving the Soviet Union was linked to a Rhodesian trading agency, Michelle Enterprises, Ltd., which allegedly exported "tobacco and other agricultural commodities from Rhodesia and, in turn, imported chemicals, metals and agricultural requirements from Eastern Europe," according to the UN report.

The amounts involved and the nature of the Soviet chemicals and metals allegedly traded to Rhodesia were not specified, except for a general description of the trade as "major."

Rhodesia's high-quality tobacco has continued to reach world markets and has been a major factor in maintaining the Rhodesian economy, despite sanctions.

The network used to export the tobacco has never been exposed, however.

It is apparent from the quiet way that sanctions committee circulated the British allegations that it did not want to embarrass the Soviet Union.

The trade between Rhodesia and the Soviet Bloc came to general public atention as a result of investigative reporting by Eric Malling of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp's. public affairs probram, The Fifth Estate, televised Wednesday in Canada.

Was That Sic or Kiss?

CALGARY (CP) — When a Calgary police constable was accused in a civil suit of ordering his police dog to attack a man, it was the dog who got the suit dismissed.

The constable spoke the command he was accused of having used to make his dog attack the complainant.

"Sic him," the constable said and 100 pounds of muscle, fur and teeth bounded over to the claimant — and covered his face with slobbery, cainine kisses.

"Then he licked the crown prosecutor," chortled Sgt. D. M. Picken, recalling the suit.

The dog in question was one of the city's nine high-trained police dogs.

The sergeant said sic isn't one of the 26 basic commands the dogs are taught to obey. He said most commands are common words dog handlers yell almost instinctively in the heat of the moment.

The first command the dogs are taught is NO and that is the most important work they learn, said Sgt. Picken, who has been in charge of the dog squad since 1961.

He said the dogs are all males because they are larger, have more stamina and are more likely to be even-tempered than female dogs.

The dogs are used primarily on prowler calls and often track the prowler miles from the building.

The Terrible Waste

The price of Canada's controls package is evident in the latest unemployment figures. Restraint has been the watchword in business and government these last two years while unemployed ranks have swollen to a record 889,000, the highest total since monthly labor statistics were first collected in 1953. As of January this year 112,000 British Columbians were out of work, 20,000 more than the month before. Numbers of unemployed are the only figures that really matter in terms of human suffering and deprivation. Projected theoretical comparisons such as the seasonally adjusted rates are meaningless and confusing to laymen. One appalling fact can't be ignored: almost one in 10 Canadians in the work force is out of work.

Conscious political decisions to fight inflation at the expense of employment are one reason for the rising tide. High interest rates, anti-inflation controls and a generally uncertain economic climate have all contributed to a lack of job creation. But Canadians should not be too quick to point fingers at a callous government in Ottawa. Had inflation been ignored for employment programs the country would be in equally bad, perhaps worse, economic straits. Unemployment and inflation are concomitant spinoffs of a system using 19th century economic theory to solve 20th century problems.

Canadian politics and economics are wedded to a myth called the free market economy. It believes that in the long run market forces will smooth out the economy through supply and demand. To debunk this shibboleth one only has to look to the current controls program — deemed necessary to save the economy by both major political parties. One doesn't have to look far for other examples. When the Canadian aircraft industry failed the federal government bought both deHavilland of Canada and Canadair to preserve jobs. High tariffs on imported clothes were recently instituted to save Ontario and Quebec's textile industry. A crazy quilt of ad hoc government intervention has always been necessary to keep the economy functioning.

Current unemployment is also to some extent the fault of Canada's unique relationship to the United States. While geography has made us rich in the consumer sense, it has also lulled us into a false sense of economic security. At every turn banks and businesses urge us to consume on credit. We happily go into debt, importing 40 per cent of every manufactured item we use. Meanwhile, indigenous secondary industry has been increasingly bought up by large foreign, mainly U.S. concerns, which give their acquisitions a branch plant role, and at the first sign of lagging profits shut them down, causing more unemployment. Our appetite for the "good life" has resulted in higher wages at the price of long strikes and lockouts. When we lift our heads long enough to see beyond our borders we find South Koreans producing electric appliances far cheaper than Canadians can, Russians producing forest products cheaper than Canadians can, and even in the realm of primary resources — our traditional ace in the hole — Brazilians have signed long term coal contracts with Japan while we dithered.

This year Canada faces a $4 billion trade deficit. By 1985 we may have a $6 billion deficit on petroleum products alone. Yet neither business nor labor appear to see the signposts in their singular search for more. A distracted government can only follow the conventional wisdom of its supporters. First wages were controlled and now a new budget will provide incentives for capital investment. Both necessary moves. But the administration doesn't have the stomach to deal with the long term problems of rationalizing Canadian industry, that is, doing away with subsidies and tariffs protecting inefficient industry or ensuring business incentives are spent on labor intensive expansion. Instead we reel from pillar to post, from inflation fighting to unemployment fighting, and back again. Each time around the track the problems become more intense.

Given our peculiar circumstances of U.S. propinquity, vast geography and limited financial resources, perhaps no answer exists to unemployment problems until the population ages and the labor market shrinks. No legislation, whether it be of the free enterprise or socialist variety, will alter the current impasse. At bottom Canadians must change their attitudes. Business must accept more regulation and government interference and labor must accept limits on wage demands. Government cannot effect such far-reaching change unless it has the support of the population.

For example, if the individual is kept to an eight per cent wage increase while profits and dividends increase then shouldn't the worker expect some recompense for his restraint? The answer is yes, as in Holland, where the government ensures through legislation wider circulation of the extra profits to benefit a broader population. Canadian businessmen and many labor executives would scoff at such a proposition as socialism or worse. It is not socialism, it is survival as most of Western Europe has realized. Until Canadians change their neanderthal attitudes our governments will follow them down the drain on a leaky raft of 19th century syllogisms. Projected total costs for unemployment insurance in 1976 is $3.78 billion, a figure in excess of the current B.C. budget. A terrible waste of people, money and energy, largely because we can't organize our own house in a global village we choose to ignore.

McCarthy Replies

The article in your Feb. 2 edition (51% in Back Pay for Mandarins) is a gross misrepresentation of the facts.

The plan that was approved for some 1,300 management personnel of the government was completed and made public through order-in-council 1898 on July 17, 1976. Any reference to a "secret document" is completely false as both the order and the statement attached which spelled out the plan in detail, were made available to the press just a few hours after being signed into force by the lieutenant-governor.

The cash benefits to members of the group cannot exceed 10% in each year of the three-year period approved for the plan, ending March, 1977.

The 1,300 managers that it covers are responsible for the direction of some 39,000 public servants. They had been promised equitable treatment to those thousands they manage by the former administration. This government found managers supervising people who were reciving benefits greater than the managers themselves, clearly an untenable situation.

The document attached to the order-in-council, Management Statement of Personnel Policy, does not "include pay rates," but deals solely with terms and conditions of employment for management personnel.

It is divided into two parts. One deals with regulations concerning sick and vacation leave, travel expenses, expenses on transfer, and the like, for management employees who do not have such matters spelled out in a contract. Virtually all of these items are identical to provisions found in contracts covering all other government employees.

As there are three clearly defined "groups" of managers and as each group differs in what benefits they are denied, the benefits they receive differ as well. Group 1 receive 17 per cent, Group 2 receive 11 per cent, Group 3 receive three per cent. The groups to which you attached your front page story comprises 30 per cent of the total 1300 managers. The less than 400 employees have the option to take up to 10 per cent in cash, and the balance of the 17 per cent (leaving seven per cent) can be used to "select" or "shop" for benefits within the M.E.G. plan. It does not allow all benefits, nor does this equal the 51 per cent cash increase that you stated in your story. The M.E.G. plan is simply an attempt to treat management personnel as fairly as the contracts ensure other public servants are treated. This is necessary for both good morale and recruitment.

Government managers have not "recieved the sweetest bonuses this side of heaven," as stated in your editorial of Feb. 3. The existing union contracts provide more security and more benefits. Union employees have also recieved higher wage increases to the point where some are now recieving a higher salary than their supervisors.

The true story of the M.E.G. plan has been available since the order-in-council was passed. It is regretted that you failed to verify the facts before rushing into print with such an irresponsibly written fabrication—Grace M. McCarthy, Provincial Secretary.

Excessive Benefits

I support W. D. Valgardson, writing in the Weekend magazine (Free the Teacher) on the shameful deterioration of our education system. I sympathize with Jim Lewis as he expresses his frustration at the ever increasing costs involved in maintaining a small business, in this instance imposed by the ever efficient municipal bureaucracy and I feel sure I am joined by many in my feeling of despondency as Oakland Industries passes from our thriving industrial scene. It isn't as though they will be missed.

Yes sir, as a small businessman myself, I am intently aware of the morass which unreal union demands and the bureaucrats have created. During the past week you made us aware of the, in my opinion, criminal circumstances whereby up to 1,300 senior government personnel are being granted comically excessive benefits.

Being slightly selfish and considering the fact that my wife and I have not had a holiday in three years, as we strive to create employment, you will appreciate our joy as we contemplate the proposed plan to grant our bretheren after six years normal employment, the seventh as a paid vacation.

Might I suggest in closing, that these good Canadians who will survive without the landfall, redirect the funds to assist Oakland Industries and thus save a much needed B.C. industry — C. M. Chambers, 3550 Cardiff Place.

Surrey Racetrack

Congratulations on your editorial of Feb. 4 (The Memorial Racetrack), which explained clearly the Surrey racetrack issue.

If the purpose of the Land Commission Act is to preserve agricultural land in B.C., and if the department of agriculture has tested the soil on Capt. Terry's land in Surrey and declared it to be agricultural land, then it is difficult to understand why it should have been approved for a racetrack. Doubly difficult when the proposal has been turned down twice before.

Let us hope that the minister of agriculture and the Greater Vancouver Regional District will file an appeal. Only four to five per cent of B.C.'s land is arable and with an increasing urban population to feed, it would seem sensible and intelligent to preserve all the farm land possible. — Margaret Wainwright, 3250 Exeter Road.

Regressive Idea

Every day in our newspapers we read about the high rate of unemployment in B.C. and now Mr. Bud Smith, Victoria school trustee, would add 39 more people to this ever-growing list. At the same time he could kill two birds with one stone by downgrading the quality of education in the city by increasing the pupil-teacher ratio. We seem to be plagued in school District 61 with voters who are cost cutters rather than education improvers. But they will still have to support these people through one form of taxation or another. I suggest it will stimulate the economy more if they continue to earn a salary. The fewer salaries earned the more depressed the consumer market and the less dollars in circulation to stimulate the economy. May I offer a vote of thanks to those trustees who voted against such a regressive idea. — Mrs. Ruth Ball, 338 Dallas Road.

Cruel Trapping

As a member of a society for the abolition of cruel trapping methods, I wish to thank MP Don Munro, for his humane effort. This member of parliament has presented a private member's bill, C-208, to the House of Commons. Its purpose is to seek an amendment to the criminal code of Canada to prohibit the use of leghold traps when a practical alternative becomes available. This method of trapping has been banned or restricted in 22 countries. It is a relief to know that a step has been taken here toward civilized treatment of a living resource. — K. Chatterton, 2180 Beach Drive.

Common Sense

Surely it is now time for good men to get together and for common sense to surface. The Agnew Peckham report, as yet unpublished, has now come out squarely in agreement with the unanimous opinion of the doctors of this city, and with the board and the staff of the hospital that the Victoria General should not be split into two halves. This means either that the Victoria General has to be downgraded to the status of a chronic care institution and moved out to Helmcken Road, or we have to take another look.

It is just not sensible to move the whole hospital out to Helmcken Road. The people the hospital serves are overwhelmingly in the downtown area, and this concentration will increase. Helmcken Road is too far for them to go. The many people that talk to me are all interested in keeping their hospital downtown and in redeveloping it.

How can one say the hospital is obsolete one day, when the day before it was working to full capacity? The hospital needs to be helped, not destroyed. This would mean a waste of many millions of dollars, leave alone the heritage to the City of generations of selfless Sisters of St. Ann.

The Royal Jubilee Hospital is already concerned with over-loading their facilities and, as Doctor Pickles, the superintendent has pointed out, they will need help if they are to take any extra strain, and this will be costly.

Let us therefore look again at the Victoria General Hospital on the present site. The best and cheapest thing to do is to build a module of facilities on the St. Ann's Academy site adjacent to the old hospital. Above this module must go new acute care wards. This new hospital can then be connected to the old hospital at the level of its main floor which will comfortably bridge over Humboldt Street should the city not wish to close it. The obsolete part of the old hospital can then be replaced during the next phase of rebuilding, by more up-to-date wards. The St. Ann's Academy site is sewered and, in spite of contrary reports, the engineers have stated that the site is feasible for hospital construction. The 1969 feasibility report by architects and engineers still stands. We do not need further expensive reports. What we need now is an architect, and to get on and build and not to waste any more time.

The Helmcken Road site will be needed in the future for the third hospital, and at the present time should have facilities which will not cause expensive unnecessary reduplication.

Let sensible men stop bickering about something so important as a hospital, and let them come together before useful political reputations are senselessly and irretrievably damaged by ill-considered remarks, conflicts of personality and plain bull-headed obstinacy. — Peter J. Banks, M.D., 1105 Pandora Avenue.

White House Open to All

WASHINGTON — Hamilton Jordan occupies the southwest corner office of the White House executive suite — Gen. Alexander Haig's old command post in the Nixon days. It used to look a little like the English library in Upstairs, Downstairs. Now it has all the tidiness of an unmade bed. The contrast is worth noting.

There has always been something about the White House that makes you want to whisper and tiptoe, but it has a sort of busy informality now. Jordan's workroom is a comfortable creative mess. Wood fire in the fireplace, black briefing books scattered on the floor before the fire, unpacked cardboard boxes on the side.

Jordan works in a corner of this room, pounding away at Carter-knows-what on an electric typewriter. He has a tiny secretary with a broken leg in a cast. When she rings him on the phone he picks it up and says: "Yes, ma'am."

He is a recklessly handsome man, with a set of teeth like a piano keyboard, dressed in a pair of dark blue slacks, loafers, and a tieless open blue shirt.

The transition hasn't been as bad as he thought, he says. Not all that different from the days "when Jimmy was governor." He doesn't define his job — says he's not quite sure yet what it is, but there is a lot of work to do, and they have a lot of goals.

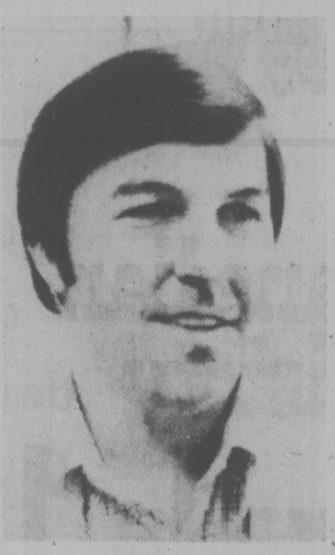
No Spinover

Such as? Well, he says, you'd have to get on a long flight with Jimmy from New York to California to hear him out on that. Jordan, Jack Watson and the other young White House aides are obviously having a little trouble about how to address the new skipper. Mr. President seems too formal. The governor is out of date and a little confusing. And Jimmy sounds disrespectful if not downright cheeky. "Maybe we'll have to compromise and call him President Jimmy, Jordan says, without much enthusiasm.

Jordan notes some differences in Carter. He is more willing to delegate authority now than when he was governor. He used to try to do too many things himself, Jordan says, and get bogged down in detail. Now he will rely more on his cabinet and permit a "sense of competition" among his White House staff, but "no spinover" if they start undermining one another.

Was there a danger in all this talk of "moral principles?" If the new president insisted on "openness," on never fiddling with the truth, on the ideal of a "higher morality," would he not encourage undue expectations and be in deep trouble if he violated these high standards?

Jordan replied that maybe the President was inviting people to expect too much, though he noted that Carter was careful to amend his premises and call for sacrifice. But "he'd never let 'em down" on two things, Jordan said: "On integrity and competence."



HAMILTON JORDAN
. . . undefined job

Maybe there was no political advantage in working to see that a "retarded child" was 10 or 15 per cent better off four years from now, but Carter cared about these things and would try to deliver on his promises.

They would make a lot of mistakes, Jordan said — already had in their relations with Tip O'Neill, the new House speaker, and with the new Senate majority leader, Robert Byrd of West Virginia — but no president would be quicker to consult and correct mistakes on Capitol Hill than Carter.

It will take a while for those White House staff members to work out their relations with one another, with the cabinet, congress and the press. Watson, for example, has the dual job of being secretary to the cabinet, a private and highly confidential assignment, and representing the president to the governors, mayors and other officials in the states, a visible and public job wherever he goes. How to put these two together?

The president says he wants all his aides to talk to the congress. He is even thinking about opening his cabinet meetings to the press, and having his cabinet appear before congress in occasional "question hours," as in the British House of Commons. Later, this town meeting approach to the nation and the world will probably be amended, but for the moment, there is something fresh and exciting around 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

Carter doesn't just talk about the cold weather but is off to Pittsburgh in a helicopter to talk to the people about their problems. He doesn't philosophize about giving Vice-President Walter Mondale work to do, but ships him off around the world. The Georgians in the White House are young, available, self-confident, self-critical, eloquent and even witty.

Eloquent and Witty

In short, there may be an energy shortage in the country, but not around the White House. Jack Watson conceded here the other day that he was a little confused about his calendar, because "there are no weekends" — nothing to gauge one day against the other in a seven-day week.

Yet the paradox here is that there is so much activity with such a sense of having time to spare. Before Mondale went off to London, the president invited the British ambassador, Sir Peter Ramsbotham, to the White House for a talk. Sir Peter had another date at the time, so the president invited him to come around later at his own convenience. The air of relaxed friendliness is not only a symbol but a fact.

Nothing like this has been seen in Washington since the early days of the New Deal, when any idea out in the town seemed to get to the president within a few hours. Same thing now. You don't even have to cross the River Jordan to get into the promised land of the Oval Office. For the time being, but probably not for long, all doors are open.

Many Questions Remain After Swine Flu Scare

THE GLOBE AND MAIL
An Editorial

Last February 4, four men at Fort Dix, New Jersey, contracted swine flu. On March 24, President Gerald Ford called a special news conference and proposed that every citizen of the United States be inoculated against the virus by November — an unprecedented medical task costing $135-million. One week later, Canada's health Minister Marc Lalonde proposed that 13 million Canadians also be inoculated at a cost of $9-million.

The American Congress swiftly approved President Ford's proposal.

In Canada, most of the provinces rebelled against Mr. Lalonde's decision (health is a provincial responsibility). In September, eight of the provinces announced they would limit their programs to chronically ill and aged persons. Then, in October, the federal government's Committee on Immunizing Agents disagreed with the provincial consensus and recommended mass national inoculation. On November 4, Ontario reversed its position and decided to immunize everybody over 20 years of age.

In the United States, nine states suspended their inoculation programs for a week in October when 30 elderly people died after receiving the swine flu vaccine. No link was found between the vaccine and the deaths but guidelines for inoculating elderly people were issued and the public relations slogan promoting inoculations was changed from "Get it before it gets you to "Get a shot of protection."

Then, slowly, it became apparent that some recipients of the vaccine were subsequently contracting a rare paralysis known as Guillain-Barre Syndrome, or French polio. Between October 1 and December 31, 19 people died of the disease in the United States, 11 of whom had been inoculated for swine flu. Of 496 people infected with French polio, 242 had been inoculated. On December 16, the United States suspended its swine flu inoculation program while a possible link of French polio was investigated. On December 30, the U.S. suspension was made indefinite, effectively ending the American program for this year's flu season. Only 40 million of a target 150 million Americans had been inoculated.

Following the American lead, health Minister Lalonde recommended suspension of the Canadian program except for the chronically ill and elderly. Mr. Lalonde indicated he was awaiting recommendations of his committee on immunization, which was to meet at a secret date and place to discourage press coverage. In effect, the Canadian program, too, was at an end. Barely 20 per cent of the eligible Canadian population had been inoculated.

Questions and ambiguities. Why the panic about swine flu in the first place? American scientists concluded that the Fort Dix strain was related to the virus that killed 21 million people in 1918-19, 548,000 of them in the United States. The implication of this conclusion was stated by President Ford in his March 24 announcement: "We cannot afford to take a chance with the health of this country." The World Health Organization (WHO) was surprised and doubtful, the Canadian Medical Association was skeptical, but the Canadian government was caught. First, it received the same advice from its own advisory committee and, politically. President Ford's decision left Health Minister Lalonde completely vulnerable to any potential outbreak.

Some critics of the U.S. program suggested that the swine flu outbreak at Fort Dix had "captured the scientists' imaginations". Mr. Ford's advisers were a tightly knit group of people for whom, in one person's words, influenza "is not only a disease, but for some of us, a way of life." Harry Meyer Jr., director of the U.S. Bureau of Biologics, had said earlier: "There are so many things you do that are not terribly interesting but which are called 'real chores'. To have a challenge of something that is a real public health interest is really stimulating."

Members of Ralph Nader's advisory group suggested that the scientists had lost their perspective. Mr. Nader's representatives were described in turn as irresponsible. In August, Dr. Blert Savin (who developed the oral polio vaccine) asked President Ford to cancel the program and stockpile the vaccine for use only if evidence surfaced of need. He pointed to thousands dying in the Southern Hemisphere's winter of A-Victoria-75 flu virus. No cases of swine flu were reported.

There have been five cases of swine flu reported in North America this year, none in Canada. In fact, the WHO says no major outbreaks of any kind of flu have occurred in the world's northern hemisphere this winter. It seems fair to say that public confidence in the swine flu program has been shattered. The question is whether the base of expert opinion on which the decision to inoculate rested was, or is, broad enough.

Advance Base for the Trident?

By ROBERT ALDRIDGE

(Aldridge is an aerospace engineer who worked for 16 years on submarine-launched missiles, but resigned when he saw the first-strike characteristics of Trident. Now an outspoken critic of the arms race, he wrote this article for The Progressive.)

In the guise of promoting a supertanker port in the Pacific Ocean's Palauan Islands to facilitate the shipment of Iranian oil to Japan, the U.S. Navy is cranking up another potentially dangerous escalation in the international arms race.

The Palauan Islands, the westernmost cluster of the Caroline group, are situated about 500 miles east of the Philippines at the southern tip of the Philippine Sea. The islands became a Japanese mandate after the First World War, were invaded by U.S. forces in 1944, and have been part of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands administered by the United States since the First World War.

A two-year, $5 million study of the feasibility of constructing a supertanker port in Palau is under way. There is strong local opposition to the project: A petition signed by island residents was presented to the United Nations visiting mission last year in hopes of obtaining U.N. intervention against the complex. But last March U.S. Navy Commander David Leete Burt, a member of a Pentagon team investigating military uses of Palau, was quoted as saying, "You realize there are millions of people in Japan and only 14,000 people on Palau; we may have to sacrifice those 14,000 people."

Admiral Kent Carroll, commander of U.S. Naval Forces in the Marianas, visited the Palauan Islands a year ago and left no doubt about the Navy's position: "The United States is certainly not opposed to (the superport) . . . I predict the preliminary studies will show it's a viable concept . . . I think it will be difficult for the Palauans to turn down." But if the superport becomes difficult for the island people to turn down, it will not be because they want it. Palauan High Chief Ibedul Gibbons has voiced strong opposition to Port Pacific — and to the construction of U.S. military installations on Palau. He believes they would have a disastrous effect on the islands. Under his leadership, Palauans have refused to lease the Navy 30,000 acres of land on Babelthaup, Palau's largest island.

When Admiral Carroll was asked about the Navy's interest in leasing acreage on Babelthaup, he replied: "If we lose or pull out of additional areas in the Western Pacific, we will have to pull back. Tinian is our priority area, but Babelthaup would be needed for contingency operations."

What is the U.S. military's real interest in Palau? In an address to the Army War College in October 1973 on strategic importance of Micronesia, Lieutenant Colonel A. R. Giroux provided an important clue: "Palau has excellent anchorages; Ponape and Babelthaup have land areas in excess of 1,100 square miles and are suitable for nuclear storage and training areas."

Giroux went on to explain that Tinian has no adequate harbor for naval use. Since the Navy's only strategic weapon is the submarine-launched ballistic missile, it seems obvious that the strategic interest in Palau centres on its use as a submarine base. Existing Polaris and Poseidon ballistic missile submarines are already home-ported at Pearl Harbor with a forward base on Guam; it is likely, therefore, that the interest in Palau focuses on Trident. In fact, rumors are circulating in Micronesia that Trident will have its forward base in Palau.

Trident is the Navy's new weapon, designed to modernize the sea leg of the strategic "triad" of land-based, airborne, and submarine missiles. Each Trident submarine will carry twenty-four missiles — half again as many as existing Polaris and Poseidon subs. The Trident I missile is an interim weapon which will be deployed on the first submarine in 1979, but the second generation missile — Trident II — will be almost twice as large. It can be loaded with manoeuvering reentry vehicles (MARVs) which will deliver hydrogen bombs within a few feet of their targets. About seventeen MARVs, each with a separate destination, can be dispatched from one missile. Each Trident submarine, therefore, will be able to incinerate 408 targets from a range of 6,000 nautical miles.

Each Trident submarine commander will control a destructive force equal to 2,000 Hiroshimas. The navy wants thirty of these submarines by 1990. In combination with intensive anti-submarine warfare efforts and other counter-force weapons now being developed, Trident may give the United States the long-anticipated power to launch an unanswerable nuclear attack.

Puget Sound has been advertised by the Navy as the only Trident support facility. The following passage appears in a pamphlet published by the Trident Project Office: "The Trident missile makes it possible for the submarine virtually to 'be on station' as soon as it leaves port in the continental United States. This allows the requisite Trident support to be consolidated at a single U.S. base, eliminating the need for costly overseas bases or the construction of submarine tenders to support the Trident fleet . . ."

But if Trident submarines will be patrolling below the equator or in the Philippine Sea, it will not pay to return thousands of miles to Puget Sound just to change crews or replace a missile. Such a shuttle exercise would make Soviet anti-submarine warfare tracking much easier.

Designed to accommodate supertankers, Port Pacific will be more than adequate to serve as Trident's forward base, As General George S. Brown, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said in his fiscal 1977 posture statement, "Events in the Pacific and Indian Ocean areas have profound implications . . . Forward deployment is the key to our readiness."

By the time the Navy's clandestine plan for the Trident base on Palau would normally be made public, Trident would have soaked up so many tax dollars that it would be considered too costly to stop. By that time, too, Trident support facilities would have spilled over into the Indian Ocean — to the island of Diego Garcia. It is an ominous and sinister exercise that is deliberately being kept from public discussion.

'Nuclear Power a Must'

THE GLOBE AND MAIL

The outgoing head of the International Energy Agency, Viscount Etienne Davignon of Belgium, warns that, like it or lump it, the world will have to use nuclear power to meet its energy needs over the next 10 to 15 years. "It is clear. The figures are unfortunately there. We won't meet the gap if we don't use nuclear energy. We can't run away from that."

As the head of a body set up on American initiative in response to the Arab oil embargo of 1973-74, Viscount Davignon speaks from the perspective of a commitment to hold down the dependence of the West on Middle East oil.

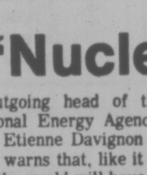
Yet his argument is persuasive. His recognition that there are real grounds for concern makes him a much more effective advocate of nuclear power than those who insist there are no dangers.

The biggest hurdle in the way of general international use of nuclear energy, however, remains to be crossed. For the international trade in nuclear technology is still, as Albert Wohlstetter of the University of Chicago puts in in the current issue of the American quarterly review, Foreign Policy, "spreading the bomb without quite breaking the rules."

It will continue to amount to spreading the bomb until there are effective controls, international, enforceable and enforced, that can ensure that the ostensibly peaceful power reactor does not become a chain in the making of a bomb. The technology for the reprocessing of waste fuel into plutonium is now readily available on the international market, France being the most eager supplier. Countries that have been in the market for this technology, South Korea, Argentina, Brazil, Pakistan, may insist that they want it only to reprocess waste for reuse as fuel. Canada's unwitting contribution to the development of India's atomic bomb tells us how much such assurances are worth.

Guidelines set individually by the exporting countries will not do. They cannot be enforced except by the International Atomic Energy Agency — which is toothless.

My False-Loving Bank



russell baker

The banks of New York are famous for their seductive advertising. One after another they appear on television undulating suggestively with hints of the delights in store once you surrender to them.

I was intoxicated with them when I first arrived in New York. In other cities I knew, banks were simply places that held your spare cash until you needed it, then lent it to you at 12 per cent interest. They were, quite frnakly, in the money-grubbing business and made few bones about it.

Naturally, once exposed to the sybaritic possibilities of banking in New York, I shopped very carefully for the one bank most likely to satisfy my peculiar tastes. I finally settled on a bank whose television commercials promised precisely what I had always dreamed of.

That has been a while ago. Since then, things have not really worked out between me and my bank. The truth is that I dislike my bank intensely.

This is a case of affection alienated by overselling. In choosing my bank, for example, I had been charmed by the promise that as soon as I entered the door, the bank president or someone looking very much like him, would dash up to inquire how he could be helpful. I still see my bank's commercials on television, and this fawning bank-president figure is still extending full courtesies every time somebody walks in.

When I walk into his bank, however, he never appears. He may be hiding under his desk, since the bank invariably greets my arrival as if I were Clyde Barrow. The bank dick gives me the constabulary eye. A large sign displayed just inside the door cautions me that bank robbery is a federal offence for which I may do a long stretch. Little cameras mounted on walls rotate and blink at me, presumably taking mug shots to be pasted up in post offices.

In a word, my New York bank greets me just like banks every place else greet me, which would be all right except that it had promised something quite different. It had promised a teller of surpassing feminine loveliness. After stepping through the door and being hailed like a Mellon by the bank president, it had promised, I would immediately find myself confronting this creature of infinite beauty.

She would croon to me the latest sweetness about the interest rate, making my heart pound in a delirium of decimal points. She would show me secret chequing-account bargains that would produce fevers of gladness about having established a liaison with this particular bank instead of its vicious competitor across the street.

I have been looking in vain for this woman for two years now. After stepping through the door, being cased by the bank dick and being photographed for Wanted posters, I do not proceed immediately to a beautiful teller. Instead, I stand at the end of a long queue of customers which winds back and forth through a rope maze. The hopeless postures of the waiting hordes suggest a group of undesirables awaiting deportation.

We stand there 15, 20, 25 minutes and, as we slowly shuffle ahead and the tellers begin to appear over the horizon, we see that the beautiful woman with the sweet news about interest rates and new chequing-account miracles is not among them. They are just like bank tellers all over the world — bored, underpaid, quick to look pained at anyone who wants to withdraw money, quicker to look suspicious if the withdrawal is larger than $7.50.

In my bank's commercial, the bank dick often joins me and the bank president at the beautiful teller's window and gets off a bit of good-natured, homespun humor before dancing me back to the door. Outside my bank's commercial, this never happens.

The teller and I are left to go it alone.

The bank dick never sends me out with a little joke and a waltz step. Instead, I exit fighting the temptation to make a running break for it. If I do, it will almost certainly produce a hail of gunfire.

Banks of New York, you false lovers! Why do you promise so much, deliver so nothing?

SYMPHONY GRANTED $50,000

The Capital Region Board approved a $50,000 grant in support of the Victoria Symphony Wednesday, despite opposition from Central and North Saanich representatives.

The symphony has for years received annual support from Victoria, Saanich, Oak Bay and Esquimalt through their inter-municipal committee. This is the first time the grant has been made on a region-wide basis although the board was at pains to underline that it is not to be taken as new regional policy.

Last year the symphony society got $40,000 from the four core municipalities. The new arrangement means the orchestra gets $10,000 more while the core municipalities actually contribute a little less.

The load is now shared by the three other smaller municipalities of Sidney, North Saanich and Central Saanich as well as the electoral areas of Colwood, Langford, Metchosin, Sooke, View Royal, Salt Spring Island and the outer Gulf Islands.

The principle of making grants on a regional basis produced a 30-minute debate, with directors Dave Hill of Central Saanich and George Westwood of North Saanich leading the opposition.

Hill said it is a case of regional government building another bureaucratic empire and there is a danger grant applications to the region will become so numerous they will be rubber stamped.

Westwood said such a move will be seen by some as a further erosion of municipal autonomy.

Suggestions that smaller municipalities and electoral areas can be swamped by the bigger municipalities under the region's weighted vote system led Victoria Mayor Mike Young and Ald. Murray Glazier to pass up voting on the question.

But the executive committee's recommendation that the $50,00 grant be approved passed easily, with a clear majority of electoral areas favoring it as well as other core municipal representatives.

Oak Bay director John Goult said it is far fairer to spread the financial burden throughout the region rather than have just some municipalities support the symphony.

In making its application, the symphony society showed how many supporters came from each part of the Capital district.

Ottawa Drops Restraint Push

OTTAWA (CP) — The government says it has abandoned a publicity campaign to convince taxpayers it is serious about austerity and will proceed with expected record spending this year.

Treasury Board President Robert Andras told the Commons on Wednesday that government spending estimates for the 1977-78 fiscal year will be tabled Feb. 16.

Total federal spending is expected to exceed a record $46 billion this year despite stringent austerity measures imposed in December, 1975 — two months after the introduction of compulsory wage and price controls.

Even with rigid cost-cutting in every department and with a reduction in the rate of growth of the civil service, total government spending is expected to increase 14 per cent to $42.1 billion in the fiscal year ending March 31.

Projections are for a further 11 per cent increase to $46.7 billion in 1977-78.

Claude Lemelin, special communications adviser to Treasury Board Secretary Gordon Osbaldeston, said the government did not want the publicity campaign to look like propaganda.

"The decision was made that if the minister is constantly going to be accused of making propaganda, it would be counter-productive," Lemelin said in an interview.

Ministers were to refer to spending restraint in every public speech and meetings with members of the public, especially businessmen.

Lemelin said departments submitted the information on cost-cutting, but it will not be publicly promoted.

When he announced the spending restraints 14 months ago, Jean Chretien, Andras's predecessor, promised to cut $1.5 billion from increases in spending and to hold spending growth to 14 per cent in the year ending March 31.

The Chretien cuts included abolition of Information Canada and the Company of Young Canadians.

'Cheap Shots' By McKenzie?

Victoria Ald. Ron McKenzie, vocal critic of the Capital Region Board and its Clover Point sewer project, drew return fire from two directions Wednesday.

Board chairman Jim Campbell repeated bluntly he thinks McKenzie has been taking "cheap shots" at the board he has just joined.

And Oak Bay director John Goult, in an abvious reference to McKenzie without naming him, said some current critics of the sewer project remind him of "the goose who flew backwards to see wwhere he's been, honking all the way."

McKenzie said last week he thinks the regional board would go broke in three weeks if it was a business. He also said a proposed revision in the sewer project from Oak Bay wouldn't work and wouldn't solve the problem of unwanted building at Shoal Bay.

When McKenzie said he protested the "cheap shot" comment, Campbell repeated it and told the new board member he would be more effective if he avoided such comments in the future.

Goult reviewed at length problems which have developed with the $12 million sewer project which would see sewage from Oak Bay pumped through a long outfall at Clover Point.

Oak Bay acknowledges its partnership with Victoria and Saanich in the scheme and just wants a fair hearing of a consultant's suggestions for eliminating a big pumping station at Shoal Bay, he said.

WCB Talks Break Over Vacations

Talks have broken off between the Workers' Compensation Board Employees Union and the WCB executive after a mediator couldn't get the two sides to agree on a vacation clause of a tentative new contract.

Victoria office shop steward Chuck Hurrell said the WCBEU has requested government-appointed mediator Clark Gilmour file his report to Labor Minister Allan Williams.

"The WCBEU will now await the receipt of the mediator's report before taking strike action," Hurrell said in a prepared release today.

Last week the union accused the WCB executive of reneging in a pact that was ready to go to the membership after seven months of bargaining.

Of 7.97 per cent compensation package, only 2.23 per cent was for wages. The rest was for increased vacation time.

LEGAL ACTION AGAINST SPRAYER

Victoria city council is taking legal action to stop a paint-spraying operation which the city fire department has branded as illegal and dangerous.

A motion on the agenda for today's council meeting would instruct city solicitor Jakob de Villiers to obtain an injunction against Under the Sun Recreation Vehicle Sales and Service Ltd., 450 Burnside Road, preventing the firm from spraying.

The action was requested by Fire Chief Eric Simmons because earlier attempts to halt the operation were ineffective.

Simmons noted in a letter to city manager Jim Bramley that his department first issued the stop-spraying order Oct. 7 last year, following a visit to the premises.

He said the order was not complied with and the firm and its principal, Bradley Alexander Leith, were charged on seven counts in provincial court Jan. 13.

A not guilty plea was entered on all the counts and a trial date has been set for May 2.

Simmons said fire prevention officials made a second visit to Under the Sun Jan. 28 and found that the firm is still doing spray work in a non-conforming booth.

"The conditions produced by the illegal paint spraying are so hazardous that an explosion and fire may occur at any time," says the fire chief's letter.

Leith denied today that any painting has been done on the premises since the Oct. 7 order, and said when the fire officials made their second inspection Jan. 28 the only work in progress was applying primer to door jambs from an aerosol can.

He accused the fire department of being over-zealous, and said he can see no fire risk.

"I have about $150,000 tied up in the building and plant and about the same in stock," he said. "There's no way I'm going to risk that for the sake of painting a few vehicles."

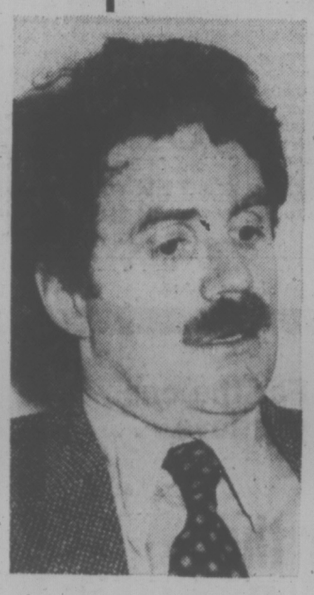
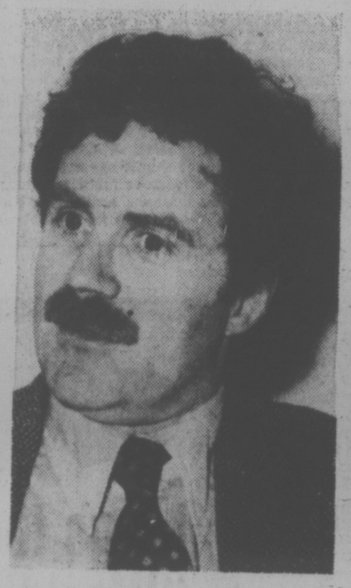
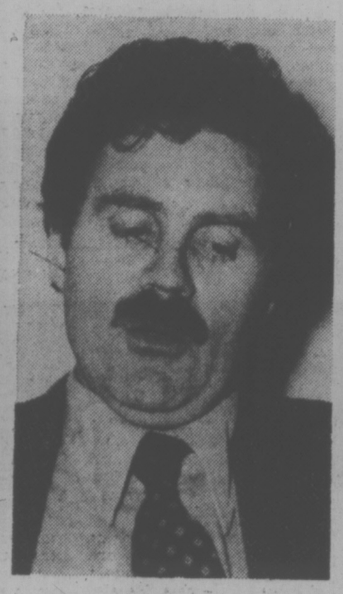
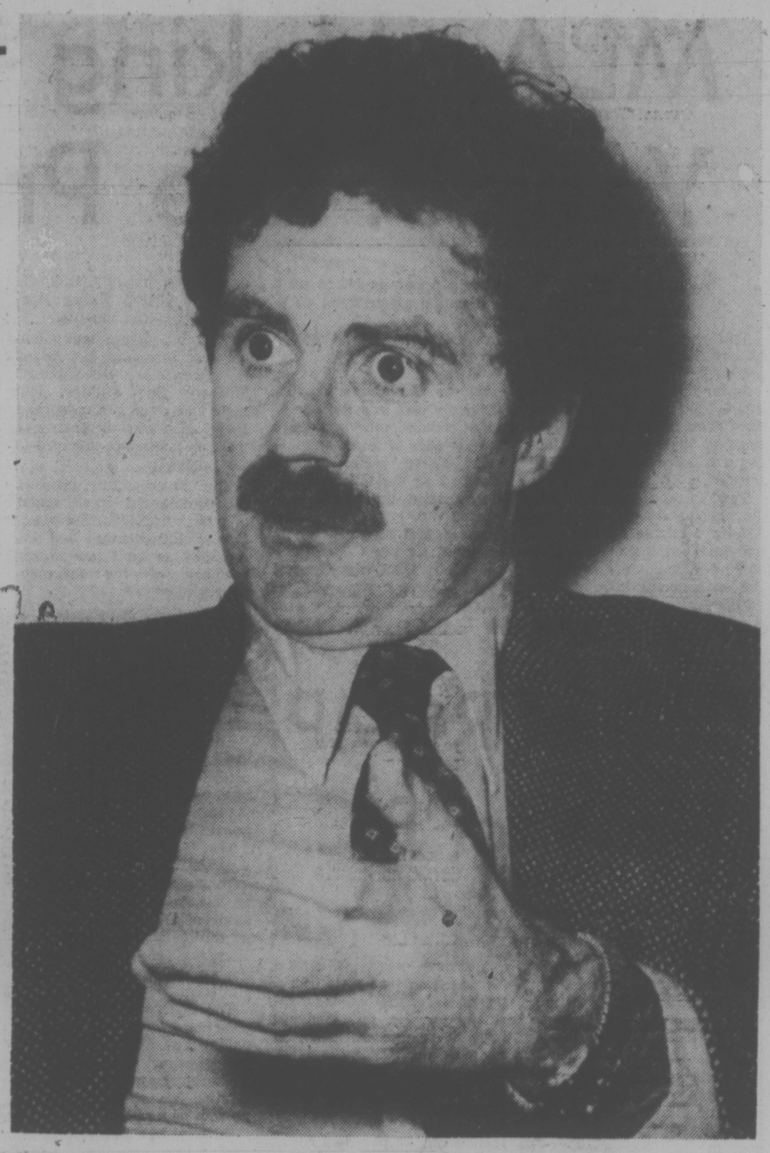
Cutting Edge of Labor Law Is Right Here in B.C. Says Hard-Working LRB Chief







Paul Weiler is facing up to the challenge of overseeing employer-labor relations in the province and feels it's a great change from his past years spent in an ivory tower



AIB Phase-Out 'Dangerous Course'

B.C.'s chief labor-mangement referee isn't in the heart of good football country, but he doesn't mind because he feels the province is the centre of labor law reform in North America.

Paul Weiler also says he is not playing as much golf as he thought he would when he became chairman of the B.C. Labor Relations Board three years ago.

"I haven't got time," he said in an interview, explaining that he has to read about 15 cases a day.

He admits to being "a big football fan" and says he is probably the only person in B.C. to have a season ticket for both the Buffalo Bills and the Seattle Seahawks of the National Football League.

He says the record of the B.C. Lions makes it difficult to be a fan of the Canadian Football League but if the team starts winning he'll start gong to the games.

But although the sports climate leaves something to be desired for the 38-year-old former law teacher at Osgoode Hall in Toronto, the challenge of the job couldn't be better.

"This is probably the cutting edge of labor law in North America," Weiler said in an interview.

"It is a great experience for someone who previously spent most of his time in an ivory tower."

Those who know Weiler and work with him comment on how ideally-suited a choice he was for chairman of a reformed labor relations board set up in 1973 by the former NDP government to administer an innovative B.C. Labor Code.

When he was apointed in October, 1973 — he officially took over Jan. 1, 1974 — Weiler had already gained a reputation as an innovative arbitrator who was much in demand in Ontario labor-management circles.

And after three years in the cauldron-like climate of B.C. labor-management relations, he is highly respected for his ability to grapple with difficult industrial disputes and appears to have won the trust of unions and employers alike.

In the interview he ranged over such matters as the unique features of B.C.'s labor relations scene, the question of worker democracy, the effects on the collective bargaining system of the federal anti-inflation program, the performance of the board and its critics.

He also touched on his own future, saying that he doesn't intend to remain chairman forever and will sooner or later go back to teaching law in Ontario.

But as to whether he will continue for another term when his five-year contract runs out Jan. 1, 1979, he hasn't decided.

"I'm really enjoying what I'm doing, but one of the reasons I'm enjoying what I'm doing is that I look forward to the time when I won't be doing it and I'm back teaching and writing a book about it."

On the performance of the board, Weiler said the amazing thing is that it survived in B.C.'s polarized labor-management climate.

"One of the best marks of our success is that both sides are vociferously unhappy with some of the things which the board does," Weiler said.

He said the main feature of the new Labor Code, in contrast with statutes anywhere else in North America, is the desire to centralize the responsibility for all labor relations law in one tribunal.

Another feature is to have a relatively flexible, informal administrative tribunal rather than the technical formal processes of the courts.

"If there is any one mark of the success in the past three years, it is that nobody wants to undo that," Weiler said.

The 18-member board, made up of Weiler, five full-time vice-chairmen, six part-time members from labor and six from the employers, handles about 3,500 cases a year.

Weiler said "the general lines of the Labor Code are all in the right direction" although there are specific areas where he would like to see some amendments.

He said it would not be proper of him to go into details but he will mention his proposed amendments to Labor Minister Alan Williams.

The labor code has brought in a number of very desirable improvements, he said, particularly a brand new picketing jurisprudence and a more realistic approach to grievance procedures and disputes stemming from collective agreements.

"It's a delicate balance, and I think a very reasonable, fair balance, based on modern economic realities rather than the old common-law approach based on somewhat archaic 19th-century common law rules."

Weiler, who receives a salary of $44,160 a year, shrugs off recent criticisms of the board by the Employers Council of B.C. as being overly simplistic.

The council said in a brief to Labor Minister Williams the board is eroding the tradition of no work stoppages during the term of a collective agreement.

The employers' group also said board rulings regarding union organizing of non-union shops seem biased against employers and employees who do not wish to belong to a union.

"The reality is a lot more complex than the simplistic comment that the board is watering down the ban on work stoppages during the term of a collective agreement," Weiler said.

He said the board is adhering to the strict definition of strikes and lockouts in the code and telling unions and employers they can negotiate further protections if they want.

As far as certifying unions, he said the board is doing what the legislature said it should do, follow the principle that if a majority of employees wanted to belong to a union they have a right to do so.

Weiler said the federal government appears to be on a very dangerous course in its preparations for abandoning wage and price controls.

"The level of discussion about de-controls has so far been tremendously unsophisticated," he said.

By Mike Hughes
Times Staff

There is no evidence that the government is designing a de-control program which will avoid either a rash of strikes or a return to inflated wage demands, both of which appear inevitable at this stage, he said.

Weiler said the major problem with the guidelines is that they were developed by people whose primary expertise was not in collective bargaining.

As a result, he added, historical wage relationships between various employee groups have "by and large escaped the net of the guidelines."

Consequently, he said, once the controls are removed there is going to be a rush by those who have lost ground to re-establish themselves in the pecking order.

And from those who have come out on top as a result of the guidelines, there will be determined efforts to remain where they are. The result will be a return to the wage-growth treadmill or a rash of strikes.

Weiler also said he disagrees with the government's apparent intention to leave controls on the public sector while removing them from the private sector.

He said to draw a crude line between the public and the private sectors is unrealistic in that it assumes there are no restraining influences in the public sector while there are in the private.

"A much finer approach, a much more specific approach is necessary," he said, "and I don't see any of that."

'It is a terribly unsophisticated view of the realities of collective bargaining to say that the public sector is either all the same or that it is uniquely different from everybody else."

Weiler said the current indecision over just when the controls will be removed will ensure that few if any collective agreements are signed this year for more than one year.

He said he feels the controls will be in place for the remainder of this year but may begin to be phased out late in the year.

Speaking about B.C.'s turbulent labor relations climate, Weiler said one reason for the atmosphere is that the work force is so heavily organized and, a unique feature in North America, employers in almost every major industry are organized as well.

The second feature is that both sides feel very strongly about their positions.

"You have an ideological, philosophical tinge to labor relations here."

Because of the relatively ideological organizations on either side, the province experiences some long strikes — "deep, intense, hard-to-settle strikes."

He said it is impossible to change that system and all the board can do is try in specific cases to change the atmosphere and structure.

"There's a lot of conflict but it's healthy conflict," Weiler said.

"It's conflict between people who believe very strongly in the positions that they are taking.

"It's not dishonest. It's not corrupt. It's not people searching for their own personal advancement or power."

Weiler said the essence of the relationship between unions and employers is adversarial.

"Conflict is the essence of collective bargaining but healthy collective bargaining has to take place where there is some consensus."

He said the employer has to feel that the union has a right to be there and similarly, the union has to recognize that the employer has to be there because it is his business and their source of employment that is at stake.

"What you've got is a basic consensus about each other's right to exist and a healthy conflict conducted between the two."

He said he thinks the pendulum has swung too far on the conflict side of the spectrum but he would not want to see it swing back completely the other way in a drive by some for co-determination or participation in the company.

Weiler said he is conservative in his approach to the West German idea of worker participation and worker democracy. He feels it should be evaluated carefully and entered into only on an experimental basis at first.

"I think the worst thing, a counter-productive thing, is for people to buy the idea of worker democracy on the basis that that is the great antidote for industrial unrest.

"What you'll get from that is you won't solve the problem of industrial unrest and you'll corrupt the idea of industrial democracy."

Weiler said one of the reasons for the difficult industrial climate of the early '70s was the fact that inflation destroyed the normal adversarial relationship between labor and management.

"They no longer had any parameters to be realistic with each other."

He said there is a great deal of room for exploring common, non-adversarial problems, such as alcoholism in the work place, and then letting this spirit of co-operation carry over to the bargaining table.

"Let each other see that they're not pariahs, not totally uninterested in the welfare of the other side."

Through it all, Weiler says he is "having a great time," that although he is very busy — he is just now beginning to work on last year's holidays — each day brings new and interesting cases.

He said the board members are going through a restful period right now with few highly-intense type cases, but he adds they better enjoy the respite now because it is going to be a busy spring and summer.

MLAs Making This Year of the Probe

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

This year may go down in history as the year of the probes in the B.C. legislature.

So far this session, not yet a month old — seven orders have been made for investigations of various sorts, including a full-fledged Royal Commission.

Two of the studies were started quietly by Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis and involved the municipality of Surrey, four were called by the government after repeated opposition howls and one is a probe to determine how the opporition got its hands on a confidential government document.

Following are the studies in the order they were called:

—After allegations that an employee of the municipality of Surrey was in a position to make windfall profits because of knowledge of a new municipal swere line, Curtis launched an investigation into the situation through the inspector of municivalities. There is still no word on its outcome;

—Deputy Attorney-General David Vickers was put in charge of an investigation to see if anyone in government used inside information on the proposed Grizzly Valley pipeline for personal benefits.

Four government employees, including two aides to Economic Development Minister Don Phillips, lost their jobs when it was learned they had traded in shares of the two companies involved in the proposal.

The investigation involves the commercial fraud squad of the RCMP, Securities Branch investigators and the directors of civil law in the ministry of the attorney-general;

—The third investigation, a judicial inquiry, upstaged the Vickers study and has basically taken its place.

The public inquiry is headed by B.C. Supreme Court Judge Mr. Justice Walter Kirke Smith and will look into all aspects of the Grizzly Valley controversy, including the new twist of whether anyone with inside information bought land.

The inquiry gets underway Feb. 21;

—Vickers is also in charge of the fourth investigation, a study of all evidence presented during a 41-day trial on a charge of civil fraud against the government-owned B.C. Railway.

The BCR paid Alberta construction company M.E.L. paving Ltd. $2.5 million in an out of court settlement but Vickers reports that his investigation has so far turned up no sign of fraud.

Vickers has been upstaged again, this time by the announcement of a Royal Commission, but his inquiry continues;

—Investigation number five also belongs to Vickers and is a study of how the NDP got a confidential government documents that were supposed to be resting safely in the personal files of Environment Minister Jim Nielsen.

The documents involved are a memo to Nielsen from Dan Campbell in the premier's office and a controversial letter from civil servant Klaus Ohlemann naming some of his coworkers as NDPers.

The letter was sent to Campbell who forwarded it to Nielsen.

The NDP produced both doeuments in the legislature last week and the government wants to know if a civil servant broke his oath of office to get the material to the opposition;

—Curtis gets in again on the sixth investigation, as does Surrey. This study involves a look at whether Surrey council was involved in any plea bargaining deals with Capt. Harry Terry, who had been charged with violating a municipal bylaw and who also wants to build a racetrack in Surrey.

Curtis says the investigation won't take long and there could be word on it by the end of the week;

—The most recent investigation, announced by Premier Bill Bennett early Tuesday morning, is a full fledged Royal Commission into the operation of the B.C. Railway.

The three member commission is headed by B.C. Supreme Court Judge Mr. Justice Lloyd McKenzie and will look into everything the railway has ever done, is doing, or might do.

The commission's study could take as long as a year and probably won't get underway for a couple of months.

Cost of RCMP Same for B.C.

The provincial government has signed a new five-year cost-sharing agreement with the federal government for police services provided in B.C. by the RCMP.

Dr. John Hogarth, head of the B.C. Police Commission, said the province's share of the costs increases under the new agreement, but that because of additional costs to be borne by Ottawa, the actual cost to B.C. will stay about the same.

Considering that the federal government is always trying to reduce its payments to the provinces, Hogarth said, he thinks the new agreement is a "small victory."

The contract covers April 1, 1976, to March 31, 1981, and involves seven other provinces.

Under the old agreement, the provinces and the federal government split the RCMP costs on a 50-50 basis.

Under the new agreement, the split is 52 per cent provincial and 48 per cent federal in the first year of the contract, with the province's share increasing by one per cent each year until it reaches a 56-44 split in 1981.

Attorney-General Garde Gardom said that costs to the provinces which had been included in the old contract have been deleted, such as the cost of RCMP Canadian headquarters administration, the cost of inter-division transfers and a decrease in the cost of pension assessment from 15 per cent to 12 per cent, "leaving the proportions of RCMP costs to be borne by Canada and B.C. at about the same level as was the case before."

Hogarth estimated that the total cost, before cost sharing, of providing police services for B.C. will amount to a $142 million in 1976-77 — the cost of RCMP coverage of rural areas of the province amounts to $41 million; $38 million for RCMP coverage in 38 B.C. municipalities; $22 million spent by the federal government to maintain a federal force in the province; and $41 million spent by the 12 B.C. municipalities which have their own police forces.

BCR board meetings show the settlement with Keen was approved by the board, headed by then premier Dave Barrett, and including MLA Gary Lauk and then MLA Alf Nunweiler.

He said the settlement included $2,883 million on two contracts between Mile 100 and Mile 286 of the railway.

The railway currently is negotiating with Keen and K.R.M. Construction in connection with new claims.

Barrett declined to comment on Phillips' charges and referred inquiries to Lauk, economic development minister during the NDP administration. Lauk said Keen was a major contractor and that if the matter had gone to court, work on the railway would have been tied up perhaps for years.

He said Keen did not allege fraud and misrepresentation as had M.E.L. Paving and, as a result, the NDP government felt in a position to negotiate a settlement.

Lauk said he thought Phillips' statement that the contracts for $16 million was incorrect. He said it seemed too low because Keen was a major contractor.

The NDP Wednesday repeated its attempts to have Attorney-General Garde Gardom specifically include the controversial M.E.L. Paving case in a royal commission into the B.C. Railway.

For the second day in a row, Attorney-General Garde Gardom resisted efforts by the NDP to specifically include the M.E.L. charges in the inquiry.

M.E.L. Paving, an Alberta construction company which had done work on the Dease Lake extension of the railway, charged the railway with civil fraud. The case was settled out of court for $2.5 million in late 1976.

A BCR lawyer said in Vancouver Wednesday that the out-of-court settlement made by BCR grew out of an offer made by M.E.L. Paving.

Charles MacLean said the company made the settlement offer — rather than the railway to the contractor — regarding money for different parts of the contracted job.

MacLean said railway officials asked him for advice about the money claims but he he heard nothing more and the settlement announcement came as a surprise.

Allan McEachern, lawyer for M. E. L., said the final settlement grew out of an informal exchange last December between him and Harvey Grey, the senior lawyer acting for the railway.

The exchange took place after 41 days of evidence in the suit filed by the construction company against B.C. Rail.

McEachern said that as a result of his conversation with Grey, he proposed a settlement figure that, after further negotiations, ended in the somewhat lower settlement of $2.5 million.

McEachern said M.E.L. Paving was "willing to settle from the very beginning."

immediately — would be about $100 million a year.

"We just have to be sure that we know what we are going to be getting into," the cabinet minister said.

Among anticipated expenditures are the so-called northwest transportation corridor; another possible corridor in the Stikine River district to open up the area's copper deposits; and possible further expenditures on the now-notorious Dease Lake extension.

J. N. Fraine, chairman of the board of BCR, said he was not aware of any projections similar to $1 billion.

In Victoria, Economic Development Minister Don Phillips would neither confirm nor deny the $1 billion figure.

Phillips, who is on the BCR board of directors, said he was not at liberty to disclose the amount of capital the railway would need during the next five years.

He said, however, that the figure will likely be discussed during the royal commission.

COAL, COPPER MINING DOWN

Figures released Tuesday by Mines Minister James Chabot indicate coal production in British Columbia declined to 7.4 million tons in 1976 from 9.1 million tons recorded the year before.

Chabot said the coal royalty and mineral tax produced revenues of $10.59 million last year compared with $12.97 million in 1975.

He said the value of B.C. copper concentrates sold last year is estimated at $266.6 million, compared with $243.2 million in the previous year.

The estimated tonnage sold was 1,063,499 compared with 1,025,234 tons in 1975 and revenue was $7.8 million compared with $10.63 million, Chabot said.

UVic Fee Hike Seen Driving Students Out

Many students at the Universtiy of Victoria say they will not be able to return to their studies this fall if tuition fees increase.

UVic president Dr. Howard Petch has said fees will have to be increased in September — likely by as much as 25 per cent.

A total of 582 students responded to a letterwriting campaign opposing a fee increase with only three in favor of an increase.

The campaign was just under way, however, when Petch made his announcement Feb. 1.

But students still sent in letters to the Alma Mater Society and the society's report was given to Petch last week.

The combination of the difficulty in finding good summer jobs and the rising cost of everything else — buses, ferries, food, accommodation — makes attending university more difficult every year, students said.

A rise in the cost of education would create an extreme hardship, one student wrote.

Another said it will make universities available only to the financial elite.

One student saw "a basic denial of our rights" if high tuition keeps people out of university.

Some students said they barely made it back this year, and a recent survey of students who did not return to UVic last September found almost 25 per cent blamed lack of funds.

Other students criticized the university's "unrealistic priorities" in spending money on buildings and landscaping while raising tuition.

Others asked Petch to ask Education Minister Pat McGeer for enough funds so fees wouldn't have to be raised.

Others wondered why Anti-Inflation Board guidelines don't apply.

Almost two-thirds of the letters were from women, and the AMS concluded this meant women generally earn less than men and are more affected by rising education

Oh, the Names They Get Called!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Tow-Away Driver Laid Low by Wrench-Wielding Motorist

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Veteran tow truck driver Ben Smith is used to abuse, having lived with it for the past 27 years in his job.

"I guess I've been called every name in the book," says Smith, 46, co-owner of Victoria Super Service. "But it's never bothered me."

Most of the abuse is verbal.

Only once for Smith has it ended in fisticuffs. An irate motorist blew his cork, burst into the towing company's office on Alpha and came at Smith, arms flailing.

Smith lunged, the man tripped and sailed through a plate glass window.

End of argument.

Rick Essler is about a dozen years Smith's junior. He's been in the business 14 years and he's had so many curses hurled at him it's now like water off a duck's back.

"Never a day passes that someone doesn't come into the office screaming and swearing his head off," says Essler, manager of Gordon's Towing.

Women he adds, are often the worst offenders.

Since he took over the job four years ago, he's had his share of discomforting experiences — an attempted bombing, a person smashing down the wire-mesh gate to get at his impounded car.

He's had physical tangles too but nothing quite as bad as what happened to one of his drivers last year.

The driver was hooking up a car to tow it away from a downtown lot when the car owner came along, crept up behind and picked up a wrench.

Whack. The blow hit the luckless driver square on the back of his head and he was discharged from hospital 2½ months later.

"It's a living," says Smith. "Somebody's got to do it."

He tried to leave it once, got a job with an auto wreckers firm, but quit after a couple of months.

"It was so boring. I couldn't stand it. But in this job . . . well, you never know what you're getting into from one moment to the next."

Essler cites the variety as one of the major reason he's in the business. There's also the satisfaction of doing a good job, of successfully meeting a challenge, whether it's picking up the pieces at an accident, or hauling away an illegally parked car from a particularly tight space without damaging the vehicle.

And then there's humor, he says.

Like the case of a Victoria woman who was so upset over her car being impounded that she went over to the vehicle, kicked it in the side, swore at it and scolded "I told you not to park there."

Most people use tow truck drivers as sounding boards, says Essler. Their anger is normally directed at someone else. That's the first and most important thing anyone in the business has to realize.

But for a driver to last in the job, says Smith, he's got to have the right disposition . . . "a real sweet one."

The telephone book lists 31 towing companies in Greater Victoria. Most of the work is handled by the big three — Victoria Super Service, Gordon's and Totem. Tom's towing is in fourth place.

Randy Caton, manager of Totem, says he wouldn't recommend anyone trying to start up a new business these days.

"Unless the person has been operating for five years I'd say forget it. There's nothing left. Everything is pretty well tied up."

The three major firms share the bulk of the work fairly evenly and Essler describes the competition as friendly.

Unlike Vancouver, none of the towing companies here have contracts with the city or municipalities with the exception of Victoria Super Service. It has a contract with Victoria police to remove ticketed cards illegally parked in no-parking 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. zones.

Smith says on an average day in winter 10 cars are towed away during the two-hour period and in summer the number is doubled. Drivers are fined $10, of which $4.70 is paid to the towing company.

Since last fall Totem has had the lucrative BCAA contract and handles an average 40 calls a day. The company receives a flat $8.50 for each call.

Gordon's looks after about 95 per cent of the parking lots in Victoria.

No one is immune from being towed away. When Dave Barrett was premier he had his car removed from the Empress Hotel parking lot. The same happened to singer Susan Jacks.

The impounding charge is fixed by bylaw at $14. Some of the firms tack on an additional dollar, a part-day storage rate. The full-day storage rate is set at $2, again by bylaw.

Essler says he has applied to city hall for an increase in the charges to $20 tow-away and $2.50 a day storage.

He justifies the hikes on two grounds. First, the rate in Vancouver and Nanaimo is $25 and second, operating costs are skyrocketing.

He says the city business licence fee has gone up more than 900 per cent in the past year, from $30 to $280. And the federal customs duty on new vehicles jumped 30 per cent last month. A new truck — they are all made in Tennessee — cost about $13,800 last summer; this year the price is more than $18,000.

Caton says the 20 to 30 full-time drivers in Greater Victoria want to improve their image with the public.

"Everyone's got the idea we're a bunch of bastards," he says. "Well, we would like to change that, change it in a way that people aren't so scared of us all the time."

Gov't Aid Sought On Water

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Saanich Mayor Ed Lum today called for provincial government assistance in alleviating a severe water shortage in Elk and Beaver Lakes.

"The water level is the lowest it's ever been at this time of year. It would take seven inches of steady rain to bring it back to normal," Lum said. "Central Saanich is pumping out water at the maximum it's allowed under permit . . . 1.3 million gallons a day."

He said fish fingerlings in Saanich's Colquitz water system are also in danger.

"We have to let out 100,000 gallons per day for the fingerlings in the Colquitz system but we are now only able to use 53,000 gallons because of the drying level of the lake," he said.

Lum said he talked with Victoria Mayor Mike Young and asked him, as chairman of the Greater Victoria Water Board to appeal to Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis for help.

"The solution is to run a temporary line from the Greater Victoria water board's main line, about 1,600 feet away, to the Elk Lake pumphouse," Lum said. "If the minister meant what he said when he formed the Saanich Peninsula Water Commission, he should show some good faith in speeding up work on the temporary line."

Lum said the government should assist the financing of the line.

"I've already requested from my ministry that they investigate the situation," Curtis told the Times. "I'm hoping to have more information for Mayor Young as soon as I can."

"We did talk about it and I indicated I would do whatever I can," he said. "The more warnings we can sound now the better. I understand the Greater Victoria watershed is satisfactory but Vancouver Island, the Saanich Peninsula and the southern coast should all be practicing our own voluntary measures (to preserve water)."

Jim Cumming, chairman of the Saanich Peninsula Water Commission, agrees with Lum that a temporary line connecting peninsula communities to the Greater Victoria water system may be the solution.

"But that is a matter for the regional board, if there is a hardship," he said. "The engineers would have to assess the situation. It could make a difference."

He said his commission has been waiting since Jan. 18 to meet the Greater Victoria authorities.

"I understand they have a meeting on Feb. 25," he added.

Not willing to concede that Lum is correct in stating there is an emergency situation, Cumming said the problem is compounded by the fact Sidney wells are running dry and the township has been forced to buy water from Central Saanich.

Cummung said the government's edict in January that Central Saanich also service the Brentwood waterworks may be aggravating the problem.

Central Saanich's waterworks superintendent Gary Rogers said his department has been putting water into the Brentwood quarry (reservoir) for the past two weeks.

"It's a slow process to fill a hole like that," he said, "In the second week of January there was a 30-foot hole. It's now about 15 feet."

He said Sidney normally only has to buy water from Central Saanich during September and October and, perhaps, part of November. Because of the lack of rain, Sidney has had to buy water regularly since last September.

Saanich Data Firm Given Nod

Saanich's finance committee recommended Wednesday a Saanich company be awarded a contract to provide the municipality with its own computer system.

The committee will recommend to council that Datatech Milcron, 4960 Quadra, get a $208,914 contract to provide and install the equipment and programming.

Frank Keeling, executive assistant to Mayor Ed Lum and municipal administrator Bill Tremayne, said today the financing will be arranged through a short-term capital loan, spread over five years.

He said the system will be installed over three years. The entire cost, including such items as freight, maintenance and a small contingency fund will amount to $249,088.

The next meeting of council's personnel commitee will review the hiring of a data processing manager.

Keeling said the in-house computer system will be operated under comptroller-treasurer Roy Broughton's department.

Saanich now uses bookkeeping machines in the municipal hall and pays $50,000 annually for three contracts with the data centre that cover property taxes, the payroll and the voters' list.

Sewage 'Strangling' Ganges; Businessmen Ask CRB Help

Two businessmen from Ganges made an impassioned plea Wednesday for help before the Capital Region Board, claiming their Salt Spring Island village is strangling in its own sewage.

Sewage leaking into ditches near school and hospital as well as in many back yards has led Dr. Allan Arneil, regional health officer, to prohibit any more building until a sewer system is built, directors were told.

The sewage problem in Ganges was first declared a health hazard in 1964. But now "it's terribly serious."

"We've got a village that's sick and it's tired and it's on the way to its demise," said Les Ramsey, partner in a Ganges drug store.

He and Tom Toynbee, who operates a building supplies store in the village, brought along a jar of murky water ("it stinks") as evidence, as well as pictures of such sights as a closed-down laundry, a burned-out house and another house "rustic to say the least."

Ganges has a development plan but it's contingent on having a sewer system. With the current ban on any building in the village, scattered development is springing up elsewhere on the island, contrary to the plan, the board was told.

"At the present time Ganges is going nowhere, it's rotting," said Toynbee.

"I can take you to a dozen places where sewage is bubbling up through the ground," said director George Heinekey, who represents Salt Spring Island on the board.

There's a plan to solve the problem before the provincial government now, a sewage collection and treatment system estimated to cost $2.2 million. The treatment plant is a new design and the province is being asked to fund it as a pilot project.

Two years ago the Pollution Control Board rejected a plan which called for an outfall into shallow harbor waters. The treatment plant proposed would leave effluent no longer a hazard.

"It's clear that whatever plan the Pollution Control Board would be willing to approve would be beyond the capability of the ratepayers to pay for," said board chairman Jim Campbell.

What Ramsey and Toynbee asked of the board was permission to use temporary holding tanks and get on with some closely-controlled building in the village. They also want the board to help take their case to various departments of government and underline its urgency.

Directors were told Arneil has said "no" to the interim holding tanks. That question was referred to the Community health services committee.

But the board will do its best to get the province moving on the proposed collection system and pilot treatment plant.

Hot Results from Unique 'Cold Camera'

He solved it with a "cold camera," and incidentally saved himself at least $150.

McCaw, of H. R. MacMillan Planetarium, demonstrated his cold camera technique to the Victoria centre, Royal Astronomical Society of Canada, Wednesday at the Dominion Astrophysical Observatory.

Amateur astronomers aspiring to take high quality pictures of the stars can profit from McCaw's method, using about $6 worth of ordinary materials they can assemble themselves.

Before his lecture he explained the cold camera as a technique developed by a talented American high school student who made the method available to amateurs.

Taking photographs through telescopes is made much more efficient by lowering the temperature of film, rendering the image-making emulsion hypersensitive. An ideal coolant is dry ice.

Astronomers have devised some sophisticated ways of using the ice, effectively dropping film temperature to around —109F. (—92 C.). But invariably an unwanted side effect results, the condensation of air on the optics or the film itself due to the disparity between room temperature and the chilled film.

One way of avoiding the moisture has been to use a vacuum container, with tubes, seals, pump and motor — a costly arrangement that makes portability awkward.

McCaw's cold camera has a small plastic container for chopped dry ice, a flat copper plate for film backing to provide good conductivity and transfer of image, and a plug of plexiglass three inches thick.

The thickness of plexiglass between the film and telescope effectively insulates the cold chamber from the exposed parts, preventing moisture from condensing.

Inside Workers Settle

Victoria's inside workers voted by a margin of almost 90 per cent Wednesday night in favor of a one-year agreement with the city.

The employees, members of Local 388 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, voted 93 to 11 to accept the contract which provides a wage and fringe benefits package of slightly more than six per cent.

Meanwhile, their fellow unionists in seven other CUPE locals, bargaining through a joint committee, have reached an impasse in their talks with the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association.

Talks broke off Tuesday and GVLRA chief negotiator Carl Anshelm said Wednesday he would be requesting a provincial mediator.

Anshelm said today the association had to wait until it had ratified an agreement with Local 388, which it did Wednesday night, and received the proper forms before applying for a mediator.

Federal Money Expected to Help PEP's Marine Arm

Times Staff

Federal financial help is anticipated soon to help the Provincial Emergency Program's marine search and rescue organization.

Gerry Hutchinson, PEP's Victoria zone co-ordinator, whose area covers Vancouver Island and Powell River to Bella Coola on the Mainland, says meetings have already taken place to co-ordinate activities between PEP and the proposed Canadian Coast Guard auxiliary.

PEP's marine arm is SAF (Safety Afloat), a group of volunteers ogranized last May by SAF marine rescue chief Cliff Philpot and monitoring chief co-ordinator Bob Charlesworth.

SAF now has 500 members, 200 in this area, and has handled more than 100 search and rescue operations.

A ceiling of $150,000 has been set for the Ministry of Transport's Pacific Coast Guard auxiliary and Hutchinson says some of this money should be used to reimburse the volunteer SAF boaters for gas and oil used during missions.

"They've been in a number of dicey situations," he said. "Up until now the province has been doing the job for the federal people and financing the operation 100 per cent.

"There is no way we can pay by the hour or for wages lost. Some of these people put in as much as 35 hours a week."

In an incident last Saturday, when the Pacific Rescue Co-ordination Centre at CFB Esquimalt contacted SAF to help find a kayak with two people aboard in the Discovery Island area, SAF volunteers worked 20½ hours until the boat was found, Philpot said.

Hutchinson said less than $100 has been paid to Victoria SAF members because they refuse to submit claims. But his department spends thousands of dollars for equipment in such areas as Gold River, Tahsis and Ucluelet.

In Nanaimo, the SAF unit handled 62 incidents during six months in 1976 and $1,237 was paid out by PEP, about $20 per rescue, as well as $2,060 for equipment. Gas and oil costs were also reimbursed.

PEP also covers SAF volunteers for workmen's compensation during search and rescue operations, and has an "interim policy" allowing a maximum of $100 to be paid in compensation if boats are holed or otherwise damaged, Hutchinson said.

Hutchinson said the Coast Guard has agreed only to operate in "bare spots" where there is no SAF service.

PEP civilian pilots are reimbursed for out-of-pocket expenses, Hutchinson said, so the Coast Guard should do the same for SAF members.

"On the air end of it, civilians pilots are federally reimbursed. The SAF people should be the same. I want recognition for these people. They do a damned good job. The RCC and the RCMP are calling these people out constantly," he said.

Hutchinson said he welcomed the Coast Guard auxiliary.

"We're very happy. We're going to get extra help," he said. "They will be bringing in training and this will expand the service."

Hutchinson made it clear the province has no intention of opting out of its search and rescue obligations.

"We have picked up the bill in many ways and will continue to do so," he said. "We still have a responsibility to look after the people who are here."

Toronto Prices Continue Lower

The TSE 300 index fell .23 to 998.32 with declines in two of its four most heavily-weighted groups.

Declines led advances 193 to 116 with 202 issues unchanged.

Union Gas Ltd. class A shares fell ¾ to $30¼ a share, while 8¾ per cent preferred were down ⅝ to $21¾ a share and 5½ per cent preferred unchanged at $30¼ a share following a one-hour delay in trading.

The delay was for the dissemination of news that the company is filing a preliminary prospectus to issue $20 million of Class A shares in an effort to reduce bank loans and other short-term borrowing.

Westinghouse Canada Ltd. was untraded following its resumption at the opening.

A halt was called about noon Friday after Westinghouse Canada shares rose 50 cents to $22.00 a share in earlier trading.

Westinghouse Electric Corp., its United States parent firm, has offered Westinghouse Canada shareholders $26.00 a share for all outstanding shares or $3.35 a share to retain those they now own. It holds a 74 per cent interest in Westinghouse Canada.

OIL EXPLORING SOARS IN B.C.

Oil well completions in 1976 were up 100 per cent in British Columbia, increased 33 per cent in Alberta and were down in both Saskatchewan and northern Canada, according to provincial government reports.

British Columbia brought in 166 new wells, up from 81 the previous year.

Alberta produced 4,878 wells, up from 3,665. Saskatchewan brought in 251, down from 261 and there were 27 in northern Canada, down from 45.

The strong growth rate in B.C. is the result of a vigorous exploration program carried out during the year.

The program included drilling of 274,433 feet for wildcats, 238,933 in search of new areas and 415,410 feet developing previously discovered areas.

There were 16 rig licences issued during the year and 61 others were renewed.

The growth of development is expected to be maintained during 1977 as a result of the brisk exploration program over the winter.

Retail Sales Encouraging

Retail sales were stronger than expected in January, managers of major department stores said Wednesday.

But some managers were expecting a bleak month.

Sales were about eight per cent higher than the previous January, about the level of inflation.

"We have been doing much better than we expected — January was a good month," Eaton's manager Reginald Hind said.

"We are concerned that it may level off in February. We expected a slump in January but it didn't happen."

Jack Hutchins, manager of Simpson Sears, also expressed satisfaction with January sales.

"We are optimistic that it will hold up for February as well. The results for the first week are encouraging."

Hutchins said February is normally the low point of the sales year.

"Not because of ICBC or because it is income tax time, February is always a low point. It is after Christmas and January clearance but too soon for spring sales. Household furnishings are stressed in February."

A spokesman for The Bay said January sales "were better than anticipated based upon economic conditions in Victoria."

This did not mean it was a banner month but it showed the economy continued to be fairly strong despite the gloomy reports from some businesses.

Spokesmen said that, if February and March are as good as January, there is reason to be optimistic that sales will be higher than the rate of inflation for the full year.

Normally, a good year is one in which sales are up by four percentage points above the inflation rate. Sales up 12 per cent from 1976 would be very strong. The Victoria stores are not yet at that level but the target is possible, with vigorous promotion.

Retail trade in 1976 had been in the doldrums, just marginally ahead of 1975 levels, until record Christmas revenues gave all major stores a boost.

One store manager said he was surprised December sales topped December, 1975, which was a bonanza month.

Electronic items and small appliances were the most popular over the past 12 months. The biggest slump has been in sporting goods, especially ski equipment. Winter clothes have also been selling slowly because of the mild weather. Some stores have moved this merchandise by significantly lowering prices and there are many bargains on the racks.

By contrast, sales in restaurants have been rated as poor. A smaller number of visitors from the U.S. over the winter plus escalating costs for products like coffee are cutting into revenues.

The economy of Victoria is rated as stable.

Some major government and institutional construction projects — including hospitals and university construction — will offset the anticipated small decline in the private sector.

There are indications government spending will increase during the year by a small amount and more people will be hired. The unemployment rate is 10 per cent in Victoria but this is expected to decline to an average of 8.5 per cent for the year.

The rumour about the new Avis rate option is true.

For the past couple of months we've been trying very hard to be noncommittal about all those rumours that we were coming up with something that was going to revolutionize the car rental business.

Well you can't keep a rumour like that down, especially if it's true. So here's the good news. Avis proudly announces that it now can offer you a nation-wide rate option on any one of its Chrysler engineered cars or similar models.

This is how it works: When you rent a car from Avis and return it to the same station you will be charged one of two rates. Either time and mileage or a flat rate. If your mileage is low the time and mileage rate will apply. Over a certain number of miles a flat rate with unlimited mileage will apply. Avis will compare the time and mileage to the flat rate and extend to you the cheaper rate. So whichever way it works out, it's always going to work out best for you.

Now you can add our rate option to our Avis car care program that assures you clean dependable cars.

The convenience of our credit card that makes renting and payment so simple.

Our flexible corporate billing system that's a business man's dream.

And most important of all, the Avis people who really do try harder to make sure it pays to rent Avis. Hip-hip hooray. Call your local Avis office for details.

Condominiums 'High Class Communes'

VANCOUVER (CP) — The joys of life in condominiums and the people who build and sell them "like used cars" were criticized Wednesday by a man whose company manages nearly 4,000 units in the Vancouver area.

Jean Pierre Daem, president of Conse-C Enterprises Ltd. of Burnaby, berated "irresponsible developers" at a multi-family housing session of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada annual meeting.

Daem said condominiums are an excellent alternative for housing, but dissatisfaction is growing with them because of developer irresponsibility, growing consumer awareness, and the inability of the real estate industry to cope with "the cultural revolution represented by an over-democratized system of governance and ownership."

Condominium living is not "care free," he said,nor is it "the pipe dream that advertising would have us believe . . . and condominiums are really no different than a high-class commune which so many of our middle class despise."

Daem said that too often, persons who buy condominiums discover they are nothing more than tenants with rules, regulations and a homeowners' association exercising the same type of control that the landlord exercised.

In an interview, Daem predicted that about 40 per cent of condominium developments in the Vancouver area "will go belly up."

Many will be turned back to rental accommodation, and some will become a blight and a prime target for urban renewal, he added.

Ray Hession, president of the federal government's Central Mortgage and Housing Corp., told the meeting that housing starts this year probably will be 235,000 to 240,000, about an eighth less than last year.

He said, however, that home buying should pick up because home prices are stabilizing and mortgage rates should drop an additional one-quarter per cent in the second quarter of the year.

PCB Leaked Year Prior To Explosion

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — The toxic PCB chemical that escaped into the harbor area here following an explosion more than two weeks ago was actually leaking from its container prior to the explosion, it was revealed Wednesday.

Dan Miller, local spokesman for the Pulp, Paper and Woodworkers of Canada Union, said in an interview that the PCB had been leaking for a period of time.

"I know I noticed it early last summer but it might have been going on for a year or more," he said.

PCB is polychlorinated biphenyl, a toxic liquid substance used for cooling electrical transformers because it does not burn.

About 200 gallons of PCB escaped when a transformer exploded on the roof of a woodroom at the government's CanCel pulp mill here. An estimated 150 gallons escaped through drainage pipes and now contaminates the seabed near a drainage pipe at Porpoise Harbor.

Miller said none of the employees who worked in the woodroom "knew what was in the transformer's cooling system, yet the electricians knew about it, but they didn't seem to worry."

The union spokesman said the PPWC first learned that PCB had escaped three days after the transformer exploded.

"We thought something was wrong and started raising hell on Monday. I even asked the personnel manager if PCB was around the transformer but he said he didn't think so.

b.c. briefs

Youth Guilty In Killing

VANCOUVE R(CP) — A 16-year-old youth was found guilty of a delinquency when he appeared in juvenile court Wednesday charged in the fatal stabbing last August of 10-year-old Kelly Anne McClain.

The boy, whose name may not be published, will remain in custody until he is sentenced Feb. 17.

The McClain girl was stabbed 47 times after she was lured to a bathroom in an apartment in the southeast part of the city in the belief she was playing hide and seek.

Broker Charged

VANCOUVER (CP) — John Frederick Baldock of Richmond, a former broker, will appear in provincial court March 18 charged with false pretences and with two counts of fraud involving transaction of $35,000. He is charged with defrauding Homeplan Realty Ltd. and two persons between Nov. 16, 1975 and Feb. 2, 1976.

3 Guilty of Murder

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Three brothers were sentenced in B.C. Supreme Court Wednesday to life terms after they were convicted of murder in the fatal shooting of a building supply store employee.

Convicted were Richard Arthur Joyce, 30, Gordon Derek Joyce 27, and Peter Charles Joyce, 20.

They were charged after store employee Brian Raymond Sauve was killed in a $14,000 robbery Jan. 25, 1976.

Developer Charged

DELTA (CP) — Nahmema Enterprises, which has announced plans to develop a small marina along the Fraser River in Delta, has been charged by the federal fisheries department with depositing debris and other deleterious substances in water frequented by fish.

The project near Deas Slough was in effect halted by fisheries officials in December when they threatened to impound bulldozers that were clearing the five-acre site along the dike.

VISITOR DENIED JOB

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Sid Jones applied for a job with the building department here as an inspector after the city of Prince George had advertised without success for 14 months.

He was hired and flew here from England to introduce himself, but now Canada Manpower says he can't have the job.

Manpower says every employer has to get clearance from them before they can hire anyone from outside Canada. And because Jones came here for a visit, he could be asked to leave immediately.

A manpower and immigration rule says a visitor cannot actively seek employment while a guest of the Canadian government.

Jones said he never looked for a job while in Canada. He said "I already had the job and came to introduce myself."

City hall officials feel manpower is telling them who to hire and they think they have the right to hire whoever they want.

But Manpower says that's not so if a Canadian is available for the job — and they have several Canadians listed with them who would like to be a city building inspector in Prince George.

Jones thinks he will be discriminated against now in future attempt from England to get a job in Canada, but Manpower says not if the job cannot be filled by a Canadian.

Manpower officials say jobs should be listed with them instead of through advertisements in newspapers.

Tax Hike Seen

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — A $43.6 million school budget for 1977 accepted by trustees could mean a $57 tax increase for the average home owner here this year.

'Paddling Better Than Segregation

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Convict Claire Wilson testified Wednesday he would prefer being paddled to being confined under administrative segregation at the B.C. Penitentiary.

Wilson, Andry Bruce and Dwight Lucas are charged with unlawful confinement and attempted extortion of transportation as the result of a hostage-taking that began at the penitentiary June 9, 1975.

Classification officer Mary Steinhauser was fatally shot when guards stormed the area after 41 hours to free 14 other hostages.

Wilson told the B.C. Supreme Court the paddle is more humiliating than painful, and is finished in 15 minutes.

"If I had a choice I would take 15 days under punitive segregation," he said, "but not administrative segregation for an indefinite period.

"I'd take the paddle over administrative segregation."

Wilson said guards were always "playing head games" with prisoners in solitary.

"I sometimes refused to take my exercise period because the guards would be pointing their guns at me," he said. "They'd walk back and forth on the catwalk and play with their guns."

Province Gropes With Weeds

A weed called the Eruasian Water Milfoil is advancing through the Okanagan Lakes like Attila the Hun and the provincial government is groping for ways to stop it.

A Victoria inventor may have just the machine to uproot it but the problem of collecting and getting rid of it is still presenting troubles.

Environment Minister Jim Nielsen said in an interview Tuesday the government is considering holding a competition to encourage inventors to develop equipment capable of controlling the plant, which is threatening water recreation in the Okanagan system.

Most of 14 recommendations in an interim report of the advisory committee on the control of the Milfoil will be implemented, Nielsen said. The report was tabled in the legislature Tuesday.

Last year a weed-eating machine developed by local inventor Frank Hillis impressed members of the regional parks committee when demonstrated in Langford Lake.

The barge-mounted machine, with two powerful compressors, uses a jet of air to blast weeds, roots and all, from the lake bottom. They are then sucked into a tube alongside the jet and can be pumped ashore.

The committee was looking for ways to keep the weeds at bay in the three major swimming areas of Beaver-Elk Lake. But a variety of federal and provincial government agencies became involved with the problem and plans to test the Hillis machine in Beaver Lake became bogged down.

Hillis expressed disgust with bureaucratic delays at the time and said he would employ his machine elsewhere. He is out of town and unavailable to say whether he will offer it to the provincial government for testing on the Okanagan lakes problem.

Among the problems raised by weed-gathering techniques: how to store the weed harvest ashore, how to avoid re-seeding by bits and weed left behind, how to avoid increasing weed growth by stirring up the lake bottom, silt also being a potential threat to fish-spawning beds downstream.

Herring Patrol Increased

Commercial fishermen will be well protected during the herring season due to start in late February.

Ships, aircraft and personnel from the federal transport, national defence, fisheries and environment departments will be used to provide search and rescue facilities.

Rescue Labrador helicopters and Buffalo aircraft from CFB Comox will follow the fishing fleet as it moves north, the Buffalos making regular patrols over the fishing areas in their routine training programs.

Surface coverage will be given by the Canadian coast guard cutters Ready, Racer and Rider, as well as a chartered vessel.

The 22 fishery patrol vessels that will accompany the fleet will also be charted to perform search and rescue work if needed.

In the event of an emergency, the Pacific Rescue Coordination Centre at CFB Esquimalt will call out other military, coast guard and RCMP vessels as well as aircraft.

These resources include coast guard lifeboats stationed around the coast and a naval destroyer that has been scheduled for a fishery patrol off the west coast.

In addition, training exercises for destroyers, as well as Tracker and Argus aircraft, have been scheduled for the fishing areas during the season.

Two military tugs will also be available for work off Vancouver Island.

The full-scale protection program, on a larger scale than that organized in 1976, is hoped to prevent the 1975 season's disasters when 16 boats were lost and 14 men drowned.

Life Investments

TORONTO (CP) — The Canadian Life Insurance Association reports that investments by life insurance companies in Canada increased by 26.4 per cent in the last three years. At the end of 1975, the companies had $29.6 billion invested, an increase of $6.2 billion since 1972.

Sabres Gain; Canadiens Lace Canucks

By The Canadian Press

Buffalo Sabres have been having enough problems with the weather that they don't need any further interference from their National Hockey League opponents.

The Sabres, who had a home game this week postponed because of a snowstorm that has besieged their city, slipped past the Rangers 2-1 at New York on Wednesday night, giving them their second victory in nine games.

The triumph, on Andre Savard's goal with 51 seconds left in the second period, moved the Sabres within four points of first-place Boston Bruins in the Adams Division. Buffalo has two games in hand on Boston.

"At one point we had practised exactly twice in 14 days," said Sabres defenceman Jerry Korab, "and when that happens you're bound to get sluggish."

In other games, Toronto Maple Leafs downed Atlanta Flames 5-1, Montreal Canadiens crushed Vancouver Canucks 6-0, Chicago Black Hawks rallied for a 4-4 tie with Washington Capitals and Cleveland Barons beat Los Angeles Kings 6-3.

"It was a cliff-hanger out there," said Buffalo coach Floyd Smith after his team rallied from a 1-0 deficit produced by Pat Hickey's goal for the Rangers at 8:54 of the first period. Gilbert Perreault tied the score five minutes later.

Rod Gilbert said everything is on the line for the Rangers, who are last place in the Patrick Division.

"Every game is like a playoff game for us—you know how they're played. The teams with the good penalty-killing and the good power plays will come out ahead."

Darryl Sittler returned from a seven-game layoff with a torn rib cartilage to score two goals and lead the Leafs past the Flames at Toronto. Inge Hammarstrom, Don Ashby and defenceman Ian Turnbull, with his 17th season goal, had the other Leafs markers. John Gould scored Atlanta's goal.

Jacques Lemaire scored two goals and Ken Dryden stopped 22 shots for his seventh shutout as the Canadiens thrashed the Canucks at Montreal. Doug Risebrough, Pete Mahovlich, Mario Tremblay and Steve Shutt—with a league-leading 43rd goal of the season—had single scores for the Canadiens.

Dick Redmond scored on a 30-foot shot to complete a three-goal third-period comeback that lifted the home-standing Hawks to their tie with Washington. Redmond's goal came seconds after Stan Mikita's second of the game pulled the Hawks within a goal. The Capitals had led 4-1.

The Barons built a 5-0 lead at Cleveland before hanging on for their triumph over the Kings. Ralph Klassen scored a pair of goals, including one into an empty net after the Kings iced a sixth attacker.

FORMER president Gerald Ford laughs and his partner Johnny Miller holds his head in awe as Sammy Davis hits a drive in opening round of Bob Hope Desert Classic at Palm Springs, Calif.

Ford, Hope, Davis No Help to Miller

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Johnny Miller was discussing the problems attendant to playing a round of golf with former president Gerald Ford, Bob Hope and Sammy Davis Jr. on Wednesday.

The foursome played before a massive gallery that lined every fairway four or five deep and was constantly clicking cameras and calling words of encouragement.

"It's difficult," Miller said. "There is no advantage to playing in that group."

Miller, who has won the last two Bob Hope Desert Classics, could do no better than a 74 in the company of the celebrities who drew a huge gallery to the Indian Wells Country Club for Wednesday's first of five rounds.

This is a unique, 90-hole event that is spread over four courses in the desert resort where Ford plans his retirement home.

While Miller was slashing his way to a two-over-par effort on probably the easiest of the four tournament courses, Rik Massengale, the runner-up last year, fired an almost errorless round of 64 in which he hit every green, missed only one fairway and didn't bogey a hole.

Massengale, a winner in the Hartford tournament last year, took some putting lessons from his brother Don, a former tour player.

As a result, he holed two birdie putts of 20 feet, two more of 30 and one from about 45 in establishing a three-stroke lead over Alan Tapie and Bruce Lietzke, the young man who has had such a sensational start this year.

Lietzke's five-under-par effort was also at Indian Wells and marked the 17th consecutive round this season in which he has been at par or better.

A group of seven, headed by Hubert Green and Lanny Wadkins, was next, two more strokes behind at 69.

Rik Massengale	32-32—64
Bruce Lietzke	35-32—67

Italian Archer Retains Lead

CANBERRA, Australia (Reuter) — Italian Leandro Denardi, retained his overnight lead in the men's event of the World Archery Championships here after the completion of the first full round today.

Shooting today from 50 and 30 metres, Denardi scored a total of 652 points to bring his aggregate to 1,246. This gave him a lead of 25 points over second-place Richard McKinney of the United States. American Rodney Baston is third with 1,227.

American Luann Ryon, the Olympic gold medallist, took the lead in the women's event, displacing overnight leader Jadwiga Wilejto of Poland.

Scoring a total of 645 from 50 and 30 metres, Ryon took her aggregate to 1,242 points, compared with 1,222 for Wilejto, who finished sixth in the Montreal Olympic event.

Canada's men's and women's teams were both in sixth place after the first round of the second day of competition today.

Other Canadian rankings in the men's totals showed Roger Lemay of Boisbriand, Que., in 28th place and Ted Gamble of Calgary in 40th place. In the women's competition, Lucille Lessard of Kitchener, Ont., was 28th, Wanda Allan of Victoria 34th and Jean Mainland of Belleville, Ont., 43rd and last.

FATAL COLLISION

PISA, Italy (AP) — A young Italian soccer player died Wednesday from the effects of a collision with another player on the field last Sunday.

Marco Pedenese, 18, of Viareggio, who played for the youth team Stipeto, collided with a fellow player and was knocked out. He got up and resumed playing to the end of the game.

When he complained of violent headaches at home later, Pedenese was taken to hospital at Viareggio and then transferred to Pisa.

Trios Help Legion To Second

Oak Bay Trios lent a helping hand while upsetting Fuller Lake Flyers 4-2 in a South Vancouver Island Junior "B" Hockey League game Wednesday night at Fuller Lake Arena.

The result clinched a second-place finish for Esquimalt Legion and gave the team a home-ice advantage in the best-of-five semi-final playoff against Flyers. Fuller Lake could still finish in a tie with Esquimalt but the Legion would be awarded second spot on the basis of having won more games.

Bob Rees, Steve Hunt, Larry Hansen and Ian McLaren scored for Trios while Greg Adams and Rob Kadun replied for Flyers. Paul Vaesen blocked 35 shots on the Oak Bay net to preserve the win while Ken Stanton made 23 saves for Fuller Lake.

Hawks Creep Up; Top Centennials

By The Canadian Press

Wingers Tony Currie and Barry Brown came up with goals mid-way through the third period to pull Portland Winter Hawks into a 6-5 decision over Calgary Centennials in one of three Western Canada Hockey League games Wednesday night.

Medicine Hat Tigers dropped the visiting Lethbridge Broncos 5-1 and New Westminster Bruins beat Regina Pats 6-4 at Regina.

The victory at Portland pushed the Winter Hawks up to 50 points in the WCHL standings but they still occupy last spot in the Western Division. The Centennials remain in the Central Division cellar with 42 points.

The clubs skated to a 2-2 tie after the first period and Calgary led 4-3 going into the third. Portland defenceman Blake Wesley scored at 3:25 of the final frame to tie the game, but seven minutes later, Calgary regained the lead on an unassisted goal by Grant Morin.

Less than two minutes later, Currie deflected a Wesley slapshot past Centennials goalie Gerry Perreault and Brown followed with a wrist shot from the slot at 13:55 for the winning tally.

Other Portland marksmen were Wayne Babych, Perry Turnbull and Brent Peterson.

Former Winter Hawk Doug Lecuyer led the Calgary attack with two goals, while Doug Robb and Kevin McCloskey added the other Centennials' singles.

In Regina, the Pats, who trailed 3-1 and 6-1 by periods, produced three unanswered goals in the third period but their rally fell short.

Randy Betty notched two markers to lead the Bruins, who top the league's Western Division with 71 points. Singles came off the sticks of Dave Orleski, Carl Van Harrewyn, Stan Smyl and Ray Creasy.

Gerry Galloway, Kevin Krook, Ron Parent and Dirk Graham replied for the Pats, last in the Eastern Division with 16 points.

AN AUTUMN GAME MOVES INTO SPRING

TORONTO (CP) — Football, the autumn game, is moving into spring.

Toronto Argonauts released their 1977 Canadian Football League schedule today with an announcement that their first pre-season game is scheduled for Ottawa against the Rough Riders June 14, seven days before the first official day of summer.

"The 1977 season has been moved up one week earlier than in past years to prevent teams from having to play two games in a single week," said Dick Shatto, Argo general manager.

Toronto opens its 16-game regular schedule in Hamilton July 12, 71 days before the first official day of autumn.

Two City Rinks Gain Semi-Final

HARRISON HOT SPRINGS — Two of the three rinks representing Vancouver Island advanced to the semi-finals of the B.C. police curling playdowns with hard-fought "A" event victories Wednesday.

Bob Hawkes and Bill Thomas, both of the Victoria RCMP, were set to meet Ace McEachran and Fred Ickeringill, both of Vancouver, in semis earlier today.

Hawkes needed a comeback effort in the first round to down former Victorian Dave Wilson of Dawson Creek. Wilson held a 7-0 lead after two ends but Hawkes bounced back to win 11-9 and then eased by Jim Larke of Penticton 6-3 in the second round.

Things were reversed for Thomas, who had a relatively easy time defeating Denny Mackay of Kamloops 7-4 in the first round but had to rally to beat the other Island rep, Jack Hill of Central Saanich, 8-6 in the second round. Thomas, who was down 6-2 after seven ends, scored two in the eighth and stole two more in each of the ninth and 10th ends for the win.

Ickeringill advanced with an 8-3 win over Mackay and a 9-8 decision over Dave McLay of Agassiz while McEachran moved ahead with a 5-4 extra-end win over Don Thacziuk of Kamloops and a 9-6 victory over Wayne Buck of Langley.

Four of the 16 rinks in the modified double-loss elimination playdowns — Mackay, Thacziuk, Bob DeArmond of Kelowna andd Larry Gaudette of New Westminster — were eliminated.

The winner of the playdowns will advance to the Canadian police championships March 14-19 at the Victoria Curling Club.

Mikita Wants A Clean '500'

CHICAGO (AP) — Stan Mikita wants his 500th National Hockey League goal to be a crisp, clean shot and not one off his back or skate.

"Not too many guys have done it," said the Chicago Black Hawks' centre, who soon will become the eighth NHL player to reach the 500-goal mark achieved by Gordie Howe, Bobby Hull, Phil Esposito, Rocket Richard, Frank Mahovlich, Johnny Bucyk and Jean Beliveau.

Mikita scored two goals Wednesday night in a 4-4 tie with Washington Capitals to bring his career NHL total to 498.

He will have many memories when he finally calls it quits, including being the first player to win the Art Ross, Hart and Lady Byng trophies two years in a row for being the NHL scoring leader, most valuable player and the player best combining excellent play and gentlemanly conduct.

It wasn't always so. At one time he was voted the player least likely to win the Lady Byng because he spent so much time in the penalty box.

"I was a street kid and a rink rat," said Mikita, whose parents sent him to Canada from Czechoslovakia to live with his aunt and uncle. He said he had to cope with a language barrier.

After playing junior hockey with the Black Hawks' affiliate in St. Catharines, Ont., Mikita received some fatherly advice when he arrived in the NHL from Chicago general manager Tommy Ivan. He told Mikita he was too talented and should be playing instead of languishing in the penalty box.

Mikita does not like the present state of hockey.

"I see players on other teams and, yes, on our own team who can't pass a puck backhanded," he said. "And they all want $100,000.

"I'm worried that the crowds are down," he said. "I hate to see the game go downhill. Oh, it'll change again. I don't know how or when, but a lot of people had better take stock of themselves and not downgrade the game."

Mikita, who turns 37 in May, has another year to go on his contract.

"That will make it 19 years and sometimes I think 20 is a nice round number," said Mikita, referring to retirement.

Chynoweth Raps Pro Non-Support

CALGARY (CP) — Ed Chynoweth, president of the Western Canada Hockey Legue, said Wednesday he is concerned that his league is contributing financially to lower levels of the hockey pyramid but not receiving equivalent sums for major professional leagues.

The WCHL's 12 teams paid $367,073 to the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, tier two teams, provincial branches and minor hockey in 1976 and will spend a similar amount this year, Chynoweth said.

"We feel we do our part in keeping the hockey ladder stabilized at the base," Chynoweth said.

"There's just one problem. Nothing comes out of a funnel if nothing is poured in."

He was referring to the lack of draft money from the National Hockey League and the World Hockey Association for players trained in the WCHL. This money has always been considered a crucial part of major junior hockey's existence because much of it is channelled down through the system.

"Our people feel that it's not right that we should be turning a sum like $367,073 back into hockey to help develop players and yet the pros don't necessarily have to turn back anything."

"We were fortunate to have an egreement with the NHL until the end of the 1974-75 season. When they drafted a player, they paid us a specified sum for him.

"Now we have nothing with the NHL.

OLYMPICS TOO BIG FOR IOC TO HANDLE?

LONDON (Reuter) — Denis Howell, Britain's minister for sport, said Wednesday that the International Olympic Committee is ill-equipped to cope with the growing size, cost and political involvement of the Olympic Games.

Howell, who was chairman of a working committee of European ministers responsible for sport which met in Strasbourg earlier this week, said the IOC had proved unable to handle political problems which came up at the Montreal Olympics.

"We have suggested to IOC president Lord Killanin that there should be closer co-operation between the IOC, the government of the host country and organizations such as the Council for Europe," he said.

In Montreal, African nations refused to compete in the Games because of the participation of New Zealand, and Taiwanese competitors were unable to take part in the Games because the Canadian government refused to grant them entry visas.

Howell said: "At our meeting in Strasbourg, we discussed the grave political difficulties encountered by the IOC in Montreal and agreed that they were unable to deal with the sort of problems they faced.

"The two issues could have been resolved far more quickly with our involvement."

Neff Put Firemen on Ice

By BILL WALKER
Times Staff

Don't be too surprised if you read in the paper next week such intriguing headlines as "Severson Blazes Home" or "Dick Austin Real Hot Item." It could happen.

Which is by way of saying that Victoria and Playland curling clubs are about to be invaded. The B.C. Firefighters' curling championship will be played here and it is major to the extent that it has drawn a starting field of 66 rinks.

Besides, the winner will represent B.C. in the national championships at Ottawa March 28. And that is a major prize and an event that has mushroomed from a rather humble beginning in 1959.

That year only three provincial organizations — B.C., Alberta and Saskatchewan — declared champions. And although a play-off did not materialize that year, the follow-five-province playoff at Regina. That was the official beginning. Now the Firefighters championship it is completely national in scope.

Prime mover behind the project was the well-known Vancouver curler Aubrey Neff. It was his brainchild and he nurtured it through its formative years.

In 1954 Neff was the only active curler on the Vancouver Fire Department and he thought it would be a good idea to get others interested, if only as a social venture. He got about 25 replies to his first call for volunteers and, augmented with women curlers, a mixed league was born. The next year the Vancouver league went male and in 1959 Neff decided to go national. "Why not?", he said. "The Canadian Legion and Elks were organizing their national championships and I didn't want us to be left out."

So he penned numerous letters to departments in every province and the response was gratifying.

Everybody expressed an interest in the venture. Some needed more time and others didn't have any curlers to speak of. But the seed had taken root; and it started to grow. There was a financial problem in those early years, getting champions to the nationals, but that since has been overcome by the sponsorship of Carling O'Keefe.

Neff gave up the national presidency in 1968 after nine years at the helm. Before that he was B.C. president. And he is also the lone B.C. winner of the national, taking the championship at Vancouver at 1962. He lost out in a playoff in Victoria in 1972. And if someone wants to attach the word "class" to the Canadian championship, the firemen feel they can do that too. Doug Wyatt of Saskatoon, who is a three-time champion, was also Saskatchewan's representative in the Macdonald Brier in 1971.

Typical of the replies Neff received in the early days is one he got from Quebec. This was before the days of bilingualism and the reply was in English:

"Answering yours of the 24th instant, which was the first to reach us . . . suppose that our team wins the elimination in this province, does it mean that every member of the team will have to pay its the team will have to pay its own expenses or will it be paid by your committee. Like the Briar's Trophy . . . Actually there is only one person who knows how to curl in my department and this man is my secretary who has been a member of the Jacques Cartier Cuhling Club for the last 34 years. The rest of the team has to be educated from A to Z . . . I am also a member of the same club, but only as an associate member, but I am willing to learn at any time . . ."

Now, everybody's in the act and a new B.C. champion will be decided here. It should be a fun week.

Meanwhile, the field is set for the south Island playdowns at Victoria Curling Club on the weekend. There will be 18 rinks competing, two more than officials knew they had last week, because of "a complete breakdown in communications," according to Island president Edd Moyes.

"I didn't know myself, until Monday," he admitted.

This time the post entries are from Mill Bay. Last week it was Juan de Fuca. The new rinks are skipped by Bill Graelle and George Halkyard.

Don Matheson of the Racquet Club is the defending Island champion. Four rinks will qualify from the south Island for the Island final at Comox next weekend.

Draws will be held Friday at 8 p.m., Saturday at 9 a.m., 1:30 and 8 p.m., and Sunday at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m.

The Don Matheson rink has won the Mixed Masters Competitive Leeague at the Racquet Club and top prize of $300. Len Becker's rink was second while Victoria's Wayne Statton and Fennell tied for third. Men's annual 'spiel is on this weekend, the junior bonspiel, March 26, the Blue and Gold Mixed, April 6, and a new event this year, a 10th anniversary celebration, a summer bonspiel, is planned. Dates will be announced later . . . Overlooked in the recent Tartan bonspiel were seven-enders by Lorna Elder, Fernande Hawkes and Ev Flynn . . . and the PCCA will move at its next meeting to restrict playoff leading to national playdowns to club dues — playing members only. Which would mean that those paying ice time only would be ineligible.

Runners Rebound

Reynolds Roadrunners, stung by their first loss of the season to unbeaten Victoria Tigers on Tuesday, took it out on Claremont Spartans in the only Greater Victoria High School Girls' Basetball League game Wednesday.

Linda Wharf fired 20 points and Lori Holroyd hit for 16 as Roadrunners mauled host Spartans, 72-22.

Meanwhile, Rick Jeffery of Dunsmuir Demons has taken over the individual scoring lead in the boys' league with a 25.4 points-per-game average.

Close Rich-Poor Gap—CIDA

OTTAWA (CP) — A blunt warning that a new global order is necessary to reduce the gap between rich and poor countries if violent confrontations are to be avoided is contained in a foreign aid publication released Wednesday.

The Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) publication said the confrontation will be increasingly difficult to avoid unless the rich-poor gap is reduced.

It adds that the developed world is following aid policies that are 25 years old while wasting incredible sums of money on armaments.

And it says Canada is in an advantageous position in the world because it exported food and fuel at a time when shortages hurt Third World countries.

This country has the second highest wheat surplus after the United States and it is just such surpluses that could make the difference, at least in the short term, between starvation and survival for millions of people," the report says.

"Our advantageous situation imposes special responsibilities toward the international community."

The annual report for 1975-76 seeks to provide the increased detail of CIDA projects around that world that opposition MPs and other critics have long demanded.

It comes after CIDA has been under fire from such persons as Auditor-General J. J. McDonnell and Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona), Progressive Conservative aid expert.

Earlier this week Prime Minister Trudeau announced that Paul Gerin-Lajoie, president for six years, is being replaced by Michel Dupuy, assistant undersecretary of state for external affairs.

The report says that calls for a new international economic order to help the Third World economically are not enough. Citing a London speech by Mr. Trudeau in 1975, it says the challenge is to design a new order "in which it will be possible to define new relationships, not only in the economic but also in the political and cultural spheres."

"In fact, faced with the present situation and its glaring inequality, there are few choices open: either the international order will be restructured to reduce the gap . . . or mankind will take a road on which violent confrontation will be increasingly difficult to avoid."

The report says Canada enjoys excellent credibility with most countries and because of that it has been in influential positions in international debates. For instance, Allan MacEachen, president of the Privy Council, is co-chairman of the North-South meetings in Paris seeking a new international economic order.

The country could play an active role, both as a leader and a catalyst.

In the meantime, it was following a developmental strategy announced in 1975 under which the poorest in the poorest countries should get the greatest Canadian help. A new world order would require a profound change in Canadian attitudes and values.

"This is an unprecedented challenge, because it must be accepted in a very short time," the report says.

"It is today that we must begin to prepare a common future in which mankind will reject selfishness and isolation in exchange for solidarity and climate of co-operation.

"For Canadians, the choice must be clear."

CADDIES FAIL SMOG TEST

LOS ANGELES (AP) — All 1977 Cadillac Sevilles sold in California were ordered recalled Wednesday by the state pollution control board because of faulty smog controls. Eighty per cent of the Sevilles, the most expensive general-production car made in America, failed state-required tests for emissions of nitrogen oxide.

CADET UNIFORMS STAY—DANSON

OTTAWA (CP) — A plea was made to Defence Minister Barney Danson in the Commons Friday to review his decision to outfit all cadet corps in green uniforms.

He flatly and emphatically refused to change that decision.

The Sea Cadets and the Air Force Cadets are unhappy with the move that will see them lose their present dress modelled after the traditional naval garb and the Royal Canadian Air Force "air force blue" uniforms.

The new green cadet uniform will be similar in style to the "bush jacket" worn by the British Eighth Army, with horn bottons and patch pockets.

Spokesmen of the Navy League Canada and the Air Cadet League of Canada are disturbed over the irate reaction to the proposed green uniform. They are worried that there will be a large number of cadets dropping out.

Donald Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich) said the defence minister's announcement that a green uniform will be adopted for all three cadet leagues repudiated an undertaking given by James Richardson the former defence minister. He urged Danson to make a statement in the house providing an opportunity for opposition MPs to reply.

Ex-Employee Charged With Defrauding ICBC

A former employee of the Insurance Corporation of B.C. was charged in provincial court Wednesday with two counts of fraud against the corporation and released on $5,000 surety bail.

Randy Alexander Haughey, 26, now employed with the Manitoba Public Insurance Corporation's Autopac in Thompson, elected trial by judge and jury. A preliminary hearing will be held May 24.

Court was told Haughey was employed at the Douglas Street claim centre between November, 1975, and July, 1976, and the fraud charges involve amounts of $2,800 and $3,150.

Education Minister Pat McGeer, the minister responsible for ICBC, said Wednesday 76 persons were charged last year with defrauding the corporation.

In a written answer to a question by Dennis Cocke (NDP — New Westminster) he said the corporation obtained $44,295 in settlements from 26 convictions.

He said that in 85 per cent of cases where ICBC is satisfied fraud has occurred, settlements are obtained without formal charges being laid.

McGeer said $118,234 is the total amount involved in the fraud cases.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A Wilkinson Road inmate was committed for higher-court trial on four charges after a preliminary hearing Wednesday before Judge Harold Alder in provincial court Wednesday.

Brian Terrence Fogarty, 26, was charged with escaping lawful custody, being unlawfully at large, possession of a weapon dangerous to the public peace, and carrying a concealed weapon.

Fogarty was charged after a Nov. 8 incident during a visit to the Saanich medical clinic on Saanich Road. At the time, he was awaiting sentence on a charge of possession of narcotics for the purpose of trafficking.

Gary John Lupul pleaded guilty to leaving the scene of an accident and was fined $50.

Lupul, a 17-year-old rookie forward with Victoria Cougars of the Western Canada Hockey League, hit a parked car on Donnelly Avenue and caused $300 damage Nov. 28, court was told.

Lynn Cheryl Munday, 19, of 979 Thurber, pleaded guilty to 13 of 15 counts of passing worthless cheques and to a Dec. 30 Nanaimo charge of fraud.

The 15 counts, contained in two charges, alleged more than $900 in cheques written in the Greater Victoria area last December.

Mulligan said the fraud charge involved a radio valued at $64.15 for which a cheque was tendered and a cash refund attempted later that day.

Court was told the offences occurred while Miss Munday was on probation for eight counts of false pretences. She had been given a suspended sentence and placed on 15 months probation last February, Mulligan said.

Ostler remanded her for one week for a pre-sentence report.

A 19-year-old pleaded guilty to six charges of breaking and entering and was remanded until next Wednesday for pre-sentence report and sentence.

Fredrick James Lepannen, who gave police addresses in Winnipeg and Vancouver, pleaded guilty to the break-ins, in Saanich and Victoria between Jan. 26 and Feb. 4.

Guy Philip Legasse, 20, of Winnipeg, jointly charged with Leppanen with one count and charged separately in three other counts, was remanded until today after defence lawyer Ted Manman withdrew as counsel because of possible conflict of interest.

Fines totalling $600 were handed a 21-year-old Duncan man who pleaded guilty to leaving the scene of an accident and having a blood-alcohol content over .08.

Alfred Nolan Joe was fined $200 on the first charge and $400 on the second after court was told a vehicle he was driving crossed the centreline of the Old Island HIghway on Jan. 23, striking a southbound motorcyclist in the 200 block. Friends of the motorcyclist gave chase, court was told, and Joe finally hit a power pole on the wrong side of the road. A reading of .16 was obtained in a breath test, Mulligan said.

Other drivers fined for drinking-driving offences were: Gary Lloyd Heshtedahl, 26, of 1283 Astoria, $550; Larry Martin Smith, 28, of 600 Atkins Road, $500; Charles Price, age and address unkown, $500; Lawrence Harold Mabley, 38, of 1716 Newton, $450; Brian Herbert Nairn, 23, of 152 Ladysmith Street, $350; William Morris, 53, of 240 Portsmouth Drive, $350; and Donald Joseph Clark, 52, of the East Saanich Reserve, $50.

Abortion Law Changes Pledged

OTTAWA (CP) — The government promised major changes in the way the abortion law is applied after making public Wednesday a huge report that calls the current legal abortion system confused and unfair.

However, Justice Minister Ron Basford said the abortion law, last amended in 1969, will not be changed despite continued appeals to take abortion out of the Criminal Code.

Critics of the law say abortion should be a private, moral matter between a woman and her doctor.

The authors of the government report, however, make no such appeal as they were appointed only to determine whether the law is being applied equitably across the country.

The committee was led by Toronto sociologist Rolien Badgley, 46, and was commissioned by Basford.

After an 18-month study, costing $680,000, the committee concluded that "the procedure in the Criminal Code for obtaining therapeutic abortion is in practice illusory for many Canadian women."

It finds sharp disparities in the availability of abortion services across the country, and reveals widely varying interpretations of the law between provinces.

It places blame on "provincial regulations and the practices of hospitals and the medical profession rather than the abortion law itself."

The 1969 law allows abortions in a hospital only if a therapeutic abortion committee of at least three doctors says the women's life or health would otherwise likely be in danger.

However, the report says abortions could be handled better through special regional abortion centres than in the current hospital system.

Almost every aspect of the current hospital system is criticized by the report which showed how a hospital which would be allowed to set up a therapeutic abortion committee in one province could be refused in another. Similarily a woman could be refused an abortion in one hospital but not in another.

Of the 559 hospitals allowed to set up committees, only 48.5 per cent have done so. The others refused mainly on the grounds it was against ethical or religious convictions or would create a local controversy.

Meanwhile the study shows that married women in Canada have sexual intercourse more often than married men.

But single Canadian men have sexual intercourse more often than single women.

The report said the discrepancy can probably be explained by men over-reporting the frequency of their sexual experiences — "A fact which results from their perspective of what it takes to be seen to be masculine."

The study, released Wednesday, says the "over-all frequency" of sexual intercourse is almost identical.

Women have intercourse on average 1.18 times a week; men 1.19 times a week.

Married women, however, have intercourse an average of 1.57 times a week, compared with married men, who have it 1.48 times.

Single men have intercourse on a average .71 times a week and single women .44 times.

British Columbia women, it shows, have sexual intercourse more often than women in any other part of the country — 1.3 times a week.

Men in British Columbia have intercourse on average 1.29 times a week.

Government Charging Dief For His Own Bill of Rights

OTTAWA (CP) — The government has started charging the father of the Canadian Bill of Rights, John Diefenbaker, $1.25 for every copy of the bill he sends to schools, courtrooms and other institutions.

The bill was proclaimed July 1, 1960, and since then subsequent governments have, as a courtesy, supplied the former prime minister with printed 18-by-24-inch copies which he sends on request to institutions.

He sends about 250 of the government-printed copies a year.

Last November, Mr. Diefenbaker's office put in a request to the supply department for additional copies. They were sent a bill for $210.75.

Mr. Diefenbaker's office wrote Supply Minister Jean-Pierre Goyer saying the former prime minister was greatly surprised to be charged.

But Mr. Goyer's staff confirmed that the minister had ordered an end to the practice of supplying the former prime minister with free copies of the gold, red and black printed Bill of Rights.

Mr. Diefenbaker promptly returned the bundle of bills, and Mr. Goyer's office sent him a credit for $210.75.

BRITONS PLANTING THEIR COFFEE BEANS

LONDON (UPI) — British consumers, maintaining a traditional stiff upper lip in the face of the coffee price blitz, are transferring their beans from coffee pot to flower pot in a grow-your-own trend that spells boomtime for gardening firms offering the tropical plants for sale.

With retail coffee prices ranging in excess of $2.50 a pound, thousands of Britons are queuing up for coffee plants, and a coffee company, Brooke Bond Oxo, is taking advantage of the run.

Brooke Bond is offering 1.5 million eight-inch Arabica coffee plants for $2.25 each to buyers of their four and eight-ounce Brazilian blend packs.

"We are not cutting our own throats," said a company spokesman. "These plants will not mature for at least three or four years, and then only one pound of beans each. So it's a long time to wait for a cup of coffee."

$300M to Offset Fuel Cut

WASHINGTON (WP) — The U.S. Senate budget committee Wednesday approved an economic stimulus package totaling $17.2 billion for the next eight months, including provision for a $300 million program to help low and moderate-income families who face a possible cut of their fuel supplies.

The over-all size of the package is close to the $17.3 billion tax and spending combination approved last week by the House budget committee and is larger than the $15.5 billion stimulus proposal endorsed by President Carter.

The president's top budget official said Wednesday that Carter "wants to keep the economic stimulus package pretty well within the limits he proposed." Thomas W. (Bert) Lance, director of the Office of Management and Budget, said the administration puts a high priority on keeping the federal deficit for fiscal 1977 (which ends Sept. 30) under $70 billion.

CARTER PULLS PEANUT PROP?

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Carter administration wants to trim taxpayer subsidies to U.S. peanut farmers.

Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland, apparently without checking with the nation's best known peanut farmer, hopes to draft plans within a month to cut the government's annual $71 million bill for peanut price supports.

Poison Executions Eyed

OKLAHOMA CITY (UPI) — Oklahoma would become the first state to execute condemned prisoners by poisonous injection under a bill approved by the Oklahoma Senate.

Sen. Bill Dawson said his bill would institute a more humane method of capital punishment.

Dawson's bill provides:

"The punishment of death must be inflicted by continuous, intravenous administration of a lethal quantity of an ultra-short-acting barbiturate in combination with a chemical paralytic agent until death is pronouced by a licensed physician according to accepted standards."

The Senate passed the bill, 25-21, Wednesday. The measure, however, may be brought up for reconsideration.

Current law, passed last year, provides for death by the gas chamber but permits use of the electric chair until a gas chamber can be built. The state has never built a gas chamber, and prison officials said the electric chair is in such poor condition it needs $62,000 in repairs. The last execution in Oklahoma was in 1966.

Dawson said the injection method would be less costly, more humane and stand a better chance of supreme court approval should there be a test case on the method of execution.

Dawson said the bill leaves details of fulfilling the execution to the corrections department. He said officials had indicated it might be possible to rig an extension of five tubes extending from the condemned person through a wall. He said five persons could trigger the start of the solution, but only one tube would carry the lethal dose.

"That way none would know who did it," Dawson said.

U.S. Demands Shot Waivers

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Persons getting flu shots in the resumed immunization effort in the United States must sign statements saying they understand the benefits and risks of flu vaccination.

Those benefits and risks, as government scientific advisers perceive them, are detailed in a new voluntary consent form prepared by the department of Health, Education and Welfare and distributed to state and local health officers.

Persons getting shots, or their guardians, will be asked to sign a statement acknowledging, in part, that "I have had an opportunity to ask questions, and I understand the benefits and risks of flu vaccination as described in this document."

HEW Secretary Joseph Califano Jr. has recommended some 22 million elderly and chronically ill persons get shots with a combined vaccine against swine flu and the A-Victoria strain, especially those in nursing homes and institutions where the spread of flu is likely.

Doctors may give the bivalent vaccine to other persons in special need, such as hospital workers. An estimated 27 million doses of bivalent vaccine are available.

'The Real World Is Spies'—FBI

WASHINGTON (UPI) — FBI director Clarence Kelley said Wednesday Soviet, Chinese and other Communist spying "continues unabated" in the United States despite detente.

"The real world," he said, "is one of spies, intrigue and double-dealing."

The director said the FBI faces a growing problem of "neutralizing" hostile agents because the number of Communist-bloc envoys in the U.S. has more than doubled in the past 10 years.

"Our experience has shown us that a substantial number of these Soviet-bloc and Chinese officials are directly connected with their intelligence services," Kelley said.

"It must suffice to say that the intelligence initiatives of the Communist power against the United States continue unabated."

He quoted a statement made nearly a year ago by Rep. Paul Findley, (D-Ill.) that a spy arrest of that time "swept away any illusions that Communist governments . . . have dropped their undercover work in this era of detente."

No other camera quite like it.
The AE-1 is not just another "automatic" camera. For the first time in the world, camera functions are under the command of a micro-computer and electronic circuits are used not only for determining the exposure, but for automatic control of practically every working part.

New Shutter Priority System.
Unlike most automatic cameras, you start by choosing the speed required to "freeze" the subject. You then focus–and the camera's electronics determine and set the correct exposure the instant you press the shutter release! And you can continue to shoot at the same speed–with the aperture automatically adjusting to changing light conditions.

Incredible camera. Incredible price.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

By DR. JEAN MAYER and DR. JOHANNA DWYER

The next time you go to the dentist it's just possible he might tell You to roll up your sleeve before you open wide. The reason? He wants to take your blood pressure.

It's estimated that there are over 25 million people in this country with hypertension, and only one-half to two-thirds of them know it. Since it is possible to have high blood pressure without feeling any symptoms, hypertension can go undetected. And this is why some dentists, with the blessing of physicians, are pitching in to check your blood pressure along with that aching back molar.

Why is it important to keep blood pressure under control? Because it is a major predisposing factor in heart attack and stroke, No. 1 and 2 of the biggest killers loose in our nation today. People with a systolic pressure of 142 over a diastolic pressure of 90 or above have a 75 per cent better chance of dying in middle age than do individuals with "normal" pressure.

What is "normal"? It is defined as a systolic pressure — that is, when the heart is pumping blood out through the arteries — of less than 140 and a diastolic pressure — when the blood is returning to the heart — of less than 90. Mild hypertension is defined as a systolic pressure of 140 to 159 over a diastolic pressure of 90 to 94. Severe hypertension is 160 over 95, or above.

Unfortunately, while we know how to diagnose hypertension and how to treat it — although there are problems that we will go into in a moment — we have no way to identify those individuals who will develop high blood pressure. What we do know is that certain groups of people run more of a risk than others. A family history of hypertension, diabetes, overweight, lack of exercise, emotional stress, a high salt intake and cigarette smoking all are predisposing factors. You can do things to control some of these risks; others, of course, are just there.

A lot of people apparently think that the word "hypertension" refers to a state of anxiety instead of high blood pressure. In other words, if you keep calm, you won't have hypertension. But it's not true. Emotional stress certainly can contribute to elevating blood pressure, but it will not return to normal just because everything's coming up roses.

Many people also believe that hypertension is a curable disease, like tuberculosis or a kidney infection. In effect, a recent poll among the people who had stopped taking their medication revealed that half of them thought that one courtse of treatment had "cured" them. Unfortunately, this is not true, either. Once hypertension is present and even when treatment has brought blood pressure within the normal range, it is necessary to continue treatment to keep it there. It's a lifetime proposition.

Moreover, the diuretic drugs used to treat high blood pressure can produce a range of symptoms where none were before. Many a person who feels fine without drugs has trouble believing that pills, which temporarily cause diarrhea, depression or even sexual impotence, are, in fact, contyributing to his or her well being.

A number of researchers are looking into ways to meet and conquer these problems. One measure found to be effective is to train patients to take their own blood pressure at home and tailor treatment to their individual daily schedules. Another effective factor is TLC — tender loving care. At the Mayo Clinic, for example, paramedics or physician's assistants keep track of patients, monitoring them to be sure they are following the treatment routine and keeping their scheduled appointments. As a result of this personalized follow-up, the Clinic's "dropout" rate has dropped from 80 per cent in 1972 to 10 per cent this year.

Since we do not know who may be a candidate for hypertension until it strikes, there are some forms of TLC we, as individuals, can practice as preventive medicine for ourselves and our families.

Here are some things we should be doing for all-around health reasons:

—Get plenty of exercise and plenty of rest.

—Keep an eye on weight by eating a well-balanced but moderate-calorie diet.

—Cut down, if not cut out, smoking.

—Last, but by no means least, cut down on salt intake. The best way you can do that is to keep the salt-shaker off the table and away from the kitchen stove!

Barbecued Rolled Rib Roast

5-6-lb. rolled rib roast
Seasonings — salt, pepper and garlic salt

Season roast and place on barbecue spit making sure the spit is in the middle of the roast so that the roast rotates evenly. Place over barbecue fire and cook approximately 3 hours. Use a meat thermometer to determine doneness.

To build a good fire, place a double layer of briquets near the back of the barbecue and start the fire 45 minutes to 1 hour before cooking. Drafts should be controlled by a wind break. To increase heat, knock the white ashes off the briquets and the heat will double for the next few minutes.

Here's a Way Out Of Computer Snafu

elizabeth forbes

Let us say you've been getting print-out bills from department stores or other places of business, specifying an amount of money you've already paid or showing an item that has nothing to do with you.

Or you've moved to a new address and you've been trying—for months—to have your favorite magazines rerouted to that new address, with no results.

You've come to a point where you seem to be up against something you simply cannot overcome, no matter how often you plead for service.

Completely frustrated, you then start blaming the modern way of keeping records—the computer.

If that's what you're doing, you are wrong, according to Dr. Stan Clark of the University of Victoria's maths department.

Computers are very reliable, he says. They do as they are told. They keep on doing as they are told and very seldom do they fail.

If there is a mistake in your print-out bills, in your mailing address or other records important to you—then somewhere the mistake is attributable to human error and a breakdown in communications, Clark believes.

In that case, you immediately wonder, why can't you get action when you ask for corrections.

Clark suggests that while few problems "really come down to the computer, firms and agencies sometimes use the computer as an excuse for an inflexible system, which allows errors.

"A system which has no provision for correcting errors once they occur."

He also points out that as corporations, agencies and places of business become computerized "it's more difficult for individuals to receive attention for specific problems or to have errors corrected when they occur."

Therefore, "there is need for knowledgeable professionals, in other words ombudsmen, to intervene between rigid computerized systems and the frustrated individual trying to deal with the system."

Again you wonder, of course, as you read that suggestion, where you will find people willing to take on such a work.

Well, don't wonder any more.

As it happens, Dr. Clark is one of a special interest group (all volunteers) established approximately two years ago within the Victoria Chapter of the Canadian Information Processing Society, to act as a computer ombudsman service for Vancouver Island.

The group includes managers, systems analysts or programmers from both industry and government and either faculty or staff members from the University of Victoria.

Working in co-operation with the Consumers Association and Simon Fraser University, they are quickly able to diagnose specific problems, realize where and why those problems are caused and they know how to correct them.

"Above all," as Stan Clark puts it, "we can get the attention of managers and heads of computer services and we can provide access to people who run the systems."

As he and the others in this ombudsmen's group see it, there are three main types of computer problems.

"Computers are reliable. They do as they are told. They keep on doing as they are told and very seldom do they fail."

— Dr. Clark

They are individual specific errors, classes of errors due to faulty design of computerized systems and "possible" future political and social problems as a result of large scale computerization.

Individual action is an area that affects only one person. Class action would be required because a number of individuals meet with the same problems or from problems that may emerge from a number of individual complaints.

An example would be the billing system that handles charge account monthly statements "with such timing so as to make it almost impossible for the debtor to make payment without incurring additional interest charges."

In the area of policy actions Clark and his fellow ombudsmen will watch the trends in the computer field for early warnings of potential trouble and try to avoid or forestall a variety of conditions arising from information processing systems.

"Conditions that could have detrimental consequences, such as an invasion of a citizen's rights to privacy."

It would also be possible, in the event that a legitimate complaint exists and the particular service involved fails to correct the faulty system, for the ombudsman, as a last resort, to publicize the circumstances of the problem."

You'd like to get in touch with this computer ombudsman service? You've got a problem you'd appreciate turning over to these professionals? Maybe a question or two you'd like to ask?

Dr. Clark is chairman of this volunteer service. University of Victoria is lending support as well as personnel and facilities. So, the telephone at present is right in Clark's office at UVic.

You dial 477-6911, then ask for local 4750. Or you write to Victoria Computer Ombudsman Service, University of Victoria, P.O. Box 1700, Victoria, B.C., V8N 2Y2.

And here's something that should start you off on the double. This ombudsman service is FREE.

THOSE VALENTINES WERE FROM HERSELF

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Humorous, heartwarming stories involving people and romance are a natural byproduct of St. Valentine's day, says Hallmark researcher Sally Hopkins, who collects them.

One husband took his wife into domestic relations court complaining she had received 27 valentines from her "circle of boy friends." In court the woman sheepishly admitted to the judge that one person had sent them all — herself.

Some years ago TV personality Garry Moore surprised his wife on Feb. 14 by hiring four sky-writing planes to draw a heart three miles wide, pierced by an arrow six miles long, with Garry and Nell written inside.

In England romantics no longer send valentines in the form of cheques on the "Bank of Love." They were banned for looking too much like the real thing.

DIFFERENCES IN FLOUR DEFINED

Nutrition Buyline

QUESTION: Would you tell me how whole wheat flour, enriched white flour and unbleached white flour differ in nutrient content?

ANSWER: Whole wheat flour contains the three principal parts of the wheat kernel: the germ, the endosperm and the bran. Therefore whole wheat flour contains a wider array of nutrients including trace minerals, vitamin E and lesser known B vitamins as well as thiamine, riboflavin, niacin and iron. Since bran is largely ingestible, whole wheat flour also provides a good deal of roughage. Enriched flour is milled from wheat that is essentially free of germ and bran and contains added thiamine, niacin, riboflavin and iron in amounts within limits set by the federal government. Unbleached white flour is also milled from wheat which is essentially free of germ and bran. If enriched, it has a similar nutrient content to that of white enriched flour except for vitamin E. Vitamin E is destroyed in the bleaching process so therefore unbleached white flour will contain vitamin E. However if the unbleached white flour is not enriched it will have a definitely lower nutrient content than white enriched flour.

QUESTION: Is rare roast beef more nutritious than meat cooked longer?

ANSWER: Medium-done meat cooked at moderate temperature is about the same in nutritive value as rare meat. Overcooked meat has greater loss of some vitamins. The degree of doneness does not affect the protein or iron content.

QUESTION: What is carob powder and can it be used as a replacement for chocolate?

ANSWER: The pods of the carob tree found in Mediterranean countries are ground to produce carob powder which has a flavor similar to that of chocolate. Carob powder is high in carbohydrate, very low in fat, and a relatively good source of protein.

Many people who are not able to use chocolate (often because of allergies) find that carob powder is an acceptable substitute. You can use it in baking but use less sugar when substituting carob powder for chocolate.

Special Specialist: The Family Doctor

The family physician is one of the most accomplished persons in medicine today. Too often, these accomplishments are lost or are overshadowed by the so-called "glamor" of sophisticated specialists.

As a practising specialist myself, I have always admired the family doctor's fund of knowledge and his capacity to dispense it with accuracy, reliability and good judgment.

Many of the letters that are sent to me reflect experiences with these doctors and the roles they have played in the physical, emotional and social problems that surround a growing family.

Some readers longingly refer to the "good old horse and buggy doctor" who has disappeared off the horizon of modern medicine.

He still exists, even though he may now travel in sleek air-conditioned, high-powered automobiles.

Today, he is endowed with all of the same human qualities of the general practitioner who practised at the turn of the century. In addition he has at his command a wealth of newer knowledge about antibiotics, hormones, vaccines and a brilliant array of modern scientific testing devices.

Included in letters from my readers are stories of complaints about their physicians. I'm certain that in some instances they are justified. Yet I've often felt that inordinate demands made on the doctor-patient relationship may destroy it. When mutual respect and understanding have broken down this valuable segment of society ceases to exist.

I firmly believe that the physician in general practice is, in reality, a specialist in his own right. Many of these doctors are members of the American Academy of General Practice, a vast organization of physicians who are identified with the special talent of being "family doctors."

For it is they who are in the front rank of physicians who carry the heaviest burden of our nation's health. They form a solid column of support for those whose lives are distorted by emotional stress and psychological problems. They are trained to recognize early evidence of emotional illness, and to translate it in terms of the physical complaints of their patients.

The real essence of the healing art of medicine is sympathetic understanding, coupled with the ability to minister to the physical needs of those whose health is entrusted to them.

Goodies Recalled On Nursery Table

craig claiborne

By CRAIG CLAIBORNE

NEW YORK (NYT) — It was about 15 years ago that I first read an unforgettable essay on the psychology of dining. It appeared in a magazine called MD, a publication whose audience is made up mostly of doctors.

The article was titled "Prandial Psychology" and it remains vivid in my mind today. It contained a wealth of trenchant observations, many of them stemming from the thought that "many psychologic aspects of eating are not amenable to reason, probably because they were laid down in the prerational childhood years . . ."

'Saving the best tidbit for the last," the article went on, "could be a childish expression of security; gobbling it up first or eating too rapidly expresses insecurity, either an unconscious fear that the tastiest morsel may be snatched away or an uncertainty about whether there will be a next meal. The habitual desire for a midnight snack reflects insecurity, or at least a desire for maternal reassurance at bedtime . . ."

I am firmly convinced that my craving, my absolute predilection for one certain category of dessert stems directly from the cradle and the years that immediately followed. First in a highchair, then sitting on a stack of Encyclopedia Brittanica (the telephone book in the town of my childhood was only a quarter-inch thick, more or less) to get the mouth and arms in an eating situation.

I am not basically a dessert man. At least not in the passionate way of certain friends and acquaintances. I find most European pastries toothsome enough — a well-made roulade au chocolat; variations on a genoise; even Napoleons; eclairs, baked meringues; even baked Alaska. But these I can resist. Crepes suzette have a certain appeal, but they do not interrupt my sleep with sweet anticipation.

No, it isn't these confections that make me salivate, that arouse the bounds of hunger at the conclusion of a meal. The dessert category that I find totally irresistible is purely and simply nursery desserts, those custards and mousses and glorious, sensual puddings and sauces based on egg and cream.

OEUFS A LA NEIGE
(Eggs in the snow)

4 cups milk
1¼ cups granulated sugar
1 vanilla bean or 1 teaspoon pure vanilla extract
6 eggs, separated
½ teaspoon cornstarch pinch of salt
Kirsch or rum (optional)
¼ cup water

1. Bring the milk to a boil in a skillet. Add six tablespoons of the sugar and the vanilla bean or vanilla extract. Stir to dissolve the sugar.

2. Beat the egg white until stiff. While beating, gradually add six more tablespoons sugar, the cornstarch and the salt.

3. When the meringue is stiff, outfit a pastry bag with a star tube, No. 4. Fill it with the meringue and pipe it out in a two-inch circle onto a baking sheet. Pipe out the meringue to make layer upon layer on the bottom circle. This will produce a small, roundish "beehive" pattern or, if you prefer, a kind of rosette about two inches high. Continue making rosettes until all the meringue is used. The meringue is sufficient to produce 16 to 18 rosettes or "eggs."

4. Using a metal spatula, transfer the rosettes, as many as the skillet will hold, into the simmeering milk.

5. Simmer about 30 seconds on one side, then, using a slotted spoon, gently turn the "eggs" over. Poach the other side 30 seconds.

6. Drain the "eggs," which should be quite firm by now, on paper toweling. Let cool while preparing the remainder of the recipe.

7. Strain the milk in which the "eggs" cooked. If a vanilla bean was used, remove it, rinse and wipe dry, then store in sugar for another use.

8. Beat the egg yolks until light and lemon colored. Gradually pour into the strained milk. Stir over low heat just until the custard coats the spoon.

9. The custard may be flavored with kirsch or rum. In any event, strain the custard into a wide, shallow serving dish and cover with "eggs." Chill.

10. Combine the remaining sugar with the quarter cup water in a saucepan. Cook until the caramel is dark amber in color, but do not let it burn.

11. Before the caramel has a chance to set, pour it in a thin thread all over the tops of the "eggs."

Yield: Ten or more servings.

BANANAS WITH MALTAISE PUDDING

3½ cups milk
Peel from half an orange
½ cup quick-cooking farina (cream of wheat)
7 tablespoons sugar
3 egg yolks
½ cup raisins
1 10-ounce jar apricot preserves
3 firm, ripe, unblemished bananas
3 tablespoons butter
3 tablespoons Grand Marnier, rum or cognac
¼ cup toasted, slivered, unsalted, blanched almonds

1. Pour the milk into a saucepan and start to heat.

2. Peel the orange, eliminating as much of the white pulp as possible. Cut the yellow skin into very fine julienne strips. Add this to the milk and continue heating just to the boil.

3. Add the farina gradually, stirring constantly. Cook five minutes, stirring occasionally. Remove from the heat.

4. Immediately blend five tablespoons sugar with the egg yolks and add this to the hot farina, stirring rapidly with a whisk. Return briefly to the heat and, stirring constantly, bring just to the boil. Do not boil. Remove from the heat.

5. Spoon equal portions of the pudding mixture into eight small, individual dessert bowls. Smooth over the top and let cool.

6. Meanwhile, place the raisins in a small bowl or cup and add boiling water to cover. Let stand until plumped.

7. Spoon the preserves into a saucepan and heat.

8. Peel the bananas and cut them first in half, then into quarters. Cut the pieces into cubes.

9. Heat the three tablespoons of butter in a skillet and add the cubed bananas. Sprinkle with remaining sugar and cook, stirring gently, about two minutes. Add the Grand Marnier and spoon this over the pudding.

Drain the raisins and add them to the heated preserves. Spoon this over all and sprinkle with almonds.

Yield: 8 servings.

Fruit Filled Pudding

Make this pudding festive by baking in a high mold, turn out on a plate and flambe, and have equal enjoyment making it in a kitchen pan and spooning it out, laced with maple syrup, to hungry children. Try it served with a fruit sauce or custard.

3 cups whole fruit bread, cubed (or white)
3 tbsp. butter
1¼ cups scalded milk
3 medium apples, finely cubed (peeled or not)
2 tbsp. candied orange peel (chopped finely and-or 2 tbsp. dried chopped apricot and-or 2 tbsp. chopped prunes
⅓ cup ground nuts (almost any kind)
⅓ cup chopped raisins
6 to 8 tbsp. brown sugar (more to taste)
½ tsp. salt
1 tbsp. rum or 1 tsp. rum or vanilla extract
3 eggs, separated

This recipe is almost impossible to ruin and you will get to make it your own favorite way or by what is in the house.

Saute bread cubes in butter, add milk and any dried fruits, let soak.

Combine all other ingredients, except eggs, and add to the bread mixture.

Beat egg yolk separately and combine well with mixture.

Fold in whipped egg whites. Pour into buttered 2-quart pan or mold and pack firmly. Place in another pan of water in oven on lower shelf.

indoor gardens

By LYNN and JOEL RAPP

Worried in Vernon wants to know why the plants are turning brown on the tips.

We say: Brown tips can indicate lack of water, lack of humidity and-or "lousy" water, overchemicaled and generally unsuitable for our green friends. Try increasing the watering (not too much, now!), mist with warm water daily and allow the plant water to sit for 24 hours before using.

Susan asks how much water her spider plants needs.

We say: Most spider plants prefer to be on the dry side, but don't allow them to dry out completely. They can be quite temperamental indoors, demanding extremely good light and lots of attention."

Mrs. A.L.C. writes: Can the large tubers of asparagus springeri be removed when transplanting, and will they grow?

We say: Yes and yes.

Seek Help For Fear of Sex

DEAR ABBY: I am a 38-year-old woman, and I'm still a virgin. The furthest I've ever gone with a man is letting him kiss me goodnight.

Don't get me wrong. It's not that I wouldn't like to go further, but I am too afraid of sex to let myself.

I am an attractive woman with a slim body. I've been on many dates that I know could have led to the bedroom, but I always broke it up before it got that far.

I am not really afraid of MEN; it's sex I'm afraid of.

Right now I am going with a very gentle and attractive man about my age. We are casually dating, but I know he will want it to lead to sex and maybe marriage. What do I tell him? He will think I'm crazy. I'm not even sure that if I got married I would feel different about sex. Then what would happen?

I don't want to lose him because he's the first man I've ever cared for this much. If I need a psychiatrist, I couldn't afford one because I'm supporting my widowed mother who's an invalid. Help me.

"38 AND HOLDING"

DEAR "38": You need to find out why you have been fighting your normal feelings. Please seek professional counseling. And don't delay. If you can't afford a private therapist, call your local Mental Health Association or Family Service. They charge only what you can afford to pay.

DEAR ABBY: A cousin of mine was killed while she was riding on the back of a motorcycle with a guy, so my parents made me promise I would never get on a motorcycle without their permission.

Well, last summer I broke my promise. Someone saw me and this guy on a motorcycle, so may parents heard about it. I know I should have told them the truth, but when they asked me, I denied it, and they found out I lied. Now they have lost all trust in me, and I'm being treated like a three year old.

Abby, if they would only give me another chance, I would never break a promise or lie to them again. All I need is a chance to prove to them that I have learned my lesson and have grown up a lot since last summer. How can I get them to trust me?

DIANNE

DEAR DIANNE: If you're trying to live something down, don't keep bringing it up. Don't whine, nag or beg another chance. That's juvenile. Keep your lip zipped and take your punishment like an adult. You'll be trusted again when your mature behavior becomes apparent.

DEAR ABBY: What should you say to someone who you know has just had plastic surgery for cosmetic reasons?

If you say, "It's a big improvement," they might be insulted because that means they didn't look so hot before.

If you say, "You look much younger," they could take offense because you're implying they looked "old" before.

If you don't say anything, it could be worse because they've spent a lot of money and gone to a lot of trouble hoping for a noticeable change, and if nobody notices, it would all be for nothing.

Isn't some kind of reaction in order when the bandages come off, the black and blue marks have faded and all the swelling has gone down? But what?

LOST FOR WORDS

DEAR LOST: Just say, "You look great!" That will cover everything.

Valentine's Card Can Tell Plenty

CHICAGO (UPI) — The Valentine's Day card you send to a loved one discloses more than just your feelings toward that person, a psychiatrist said Tuesday.

Dr. Sherman Feinstein, a psychiatrist at Michael Reese Hospital, said the card also indicates the sender's stage of emotional maturity.

"There are lots of secondary messages in a Valentine," Feinstein said.

An extravagant Valentine, one that cost $5, suggests the sender may be uncomfortable about expressing his feelings, Feinstein said. A five-cent valentine says the sender's heart isn't really in it and he feels an obligation to send a card, he said.

Valentines containing humorous messages often are chosen by persons with immature feelings about love and the opposite sex, Feinstein said, while lacy, syrupy cards are likely to be the choice of those who somehow want to cover up the discomfort they feel about their emotions.

Valentines with sexual messages — such as "love is where you find it" or "I'll be here all day" — show the sender's fear of making overtures. "In effect they say, 'I want you, but you make the first move'," he said.

Hidden messages are one of the reasons you pick certain Valentines for specific people, even if you are not conscious of your motives, he said.

The metric system makes more and more inroads into our daily lives; nevertheless it does take some effort getting used to it.

To make it easier for you to familiarize yourself with the new measures, Canada's Metric Commission distributes several bilingual "Hang Me Up" cards which deal with the conversion of temperature, mass, length, windspeed, atmospheric pressure and precipitation.

In addition, you may ask for a 16-page booklet entitled "Moving to Metric". It explains why Canada decided to go metric and underlines the simplicity of the new system. There are only seven base units in the metric system, compared to 53 in the system which we were used to. This is why the metric system will not only make things easier for the consumer, but will also simplify the teaching of mathematics.

However, the chief advantage and main reason for the introduction of the metric system is its use by almost 95 per cent of the world's population.

The booklet urges you to start thinking metric instead of converting measurements from metric to the units you have been familiar with.

For any of these publications or other information about metrication write to: Information Department, Metric Commission, 301 Elgin Street, Ottawa, Ont. K1A 0H5.

This is a medium amount of soup and would be ideal for senior couples.

TUNA CHOWDER
(serves 3 or 4)

1 medium potato pared and halved
1 medium carrot scrubbed and cut in thirds
1 medium onion peeled and halved
2 Tbsp. margarine
2 Tbsp. flour
½ tsp salt
2 c. milk (should be made from ⅔ c. dry skim milk powder and 2 c. water) one 6½-oz. can chunk light tuna

Cook potato, carrot and onion in MINIMUM of water until tender. Drain. Cut half of the potato into dice and reserve. Cut half of the carrot into dice and reserve. Open can of tuna and reserve ¼ cup.

Make a White Sauce by blending margarine, flour and salt then stirring in milk until thickened. Remove from heat and add leftover potato, carrot and tuna and all of the onion.

Turn all into blender goblet (see below). Do not wash pot. Blend until you have a smooth puree. Return to pot and add reserved diced potato, carrot and tuna to provide some solids to the chowder. Heat through and serve. Serve with toasted rye or whole wheat bread or warm whole wheat buns.

Notes: 1) If you do not have a blender beat hard in beater bowl: 2) Add this to your soup file and label it "semi-blender".

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

When today's deal was played in the 1976 Reisinger Cup Championships, South came up with a bid which really had no justification. However, he would have fulfilled his contract were it not for an imaginative "unblocking" play by the East defender.

	♡ A 10 6 4
	◇ A 10
	♣ J 10 4 2
WEST		EAST
♠ A Q 10 9 8 6		♠ K J
♡ K Q 9 5 3		♡ J 7
◇ 9 6		◇ Q J 7 5 4 3 2
♣ —		♣ 8 3
	SOUTH
	◇ K 8
	♣ A K Q 9 7 6 5

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	2 ♠	Dbl.	2 ◇
3 NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ace of ♠.

West's two club overcall was an artificial bid known as the "Michaels Cue Bid." It showed a decent hand containing at least five spades and five hearts. North's double denoted a fair hand with, presumably, club support.

South's leap to three notrump is difficult to comprehend. But, then, such bids are made every day, with a prayer that the defenders do not find the winning defense.

Of course if West had led his fourth-highest spade, South's game contract would automatically have been defeated two tricks. East would have won the trick with his king and returned the jack of spades. West would have overtaken with the queen, after which he would have cashed four more spades.

But West, proobably feeling that the bidding was peculiar, and that possibly a singleton king or jack was floating somewhere about the table, chose to open the spade ace for a "look-see."

East, knowing that his partner had at least five spades, and hoping that they were headed by the A-Q-10, unhesitatingly unblocked by playing the king. On the queen of spades which came next, East naturally followed with the jack. West now proceeded to cash four more spades, sending declarer down to a two-trick defeat.

It is evident that if East had not played the spade king on West's ace, he would have been compelled to win the second spade lead with the king. West would now have four unashable spades in his hand, and declarer would bring his contract home with an overtrick. And so let's credit East with a fine defensive play.

Air Canada Defends English Use At Overhaul Bases in Quebec

MONTREAL (CP) — Air Canada asked MP Serge Joyal and 202 Air Canada mechanics Wednesday to withdraw a petition which alleges the airline practices discrimination against French-speaking employees.

In a document presented in Quebec Superior Court, Air Canada said it was increasing the use of French and hiring more French-speaking employees at its main overhaul base in suburban Dorval.

The airline also defended use of English in technical communications, referring to "imperatives imposed on it by the nature of its operations, the mixed character of its employees and the sources of its technical imformation."

The document said Air Canada jets and spare parts are manufactured mainly in the U.S. and England and its technical manuals are therefore in English.

Air Canada said maintenance manuals for its aircraft add up to nearly two million pages of "highly complex and technical" matter and about 70 per cent of the material was revised annually.

The airline said that in identifying English as a technical language, it was not violating principles of the federal Official Languages Act, or other laws.

The mechanics are asking the court to order Air Canada to end discriminatory hiring and promotion practices against French-speaking employees and to translate maintenance and instruction manuals into French.

Lawyers for Joyal (L—Montreal - Maisonneuve - Rosemont and the mechanics named in the petition presented several witnesses to describe the working conditions at the Dorval maintenance base, which employs about 3,500 people.

Claude Carignan, a French-speaking mechanic and teacher at Dorval for 22 years, told Mr. Justice L. Fernand Legault that courses and exams he took to upgrade his skills were conducted only in English.

The hearing continues today.

$2 Million Stocks Cashed To Pay Loans

MONTREAL (CP) — Businessman Mitchell Bronfman sold more than $2 million worth of Distillers Corp. Seagram Ltd. shares in the late 1960s when he was repaying loans from William Obie Obront, the Quebec organized crime inquiry was told Wednesday.

Bronfman, a relative of the Bronfman family that controls the Seagrams liquor empire, said the shares were sold to pay back debts.

He did not elaborate, but documents deposited earlier with the inquiry showed that between 1962 and 1974, Bronfman repaid Obront $2,473,316 in capital and interest on loans.

An accountant testified Wednesday that Bronfman's Seagrams shares were sold between 1966 and 1969, but that 90 per cent of the shares were cashed during a seven-month period in 1968.

Bronfman, 42, was asked why he had not sought funding from the Bronfman family instead of from Obront.

Defence lawyer Harvey Yarosky tried unsuccessfully to dissuade inquiry chairman Judge Denys Dionne from asking questions on what Mr. Yarosky termed "a delicate matter."

"People tend to assume that because his name is Mitchell Bronfman, he could just go out and get money from the family," Yarosky said.

In response to Judge Dionne's questions, Bronfman said he had a family inheritance but it was tied up in a trust fund and was unavailable to him when he was trying to found Execaire Ltd., an aircraft charter and leasing company, in 1962.

Bronfman said the trust fund was controlled by a maternal uncle unconnected with the Bronfman family, who was "trying to direct my life and business interests."

Accounting experts have testified that Bronfman at times paid Obront interest rates up to 100 per cent and still owes $200,000 on the loans.

Obront, described in earlier testimony as an underworld financier and "banker," is currently serving a four-year sentence for fraud.

Aid to Cuba Blasted

OTTAWA (FP) — Prime Minister Trudeau has refused to cut off Canada's aid to Cuba despite its training of guerrillas for Rhodesia where nuns and priests have been murdered.

Asked in the Commons Wednesday to reconsider Canada's friendly relationship with Cuba as well as its generous financial and material aid to that country the prime minister dismissed the suggestion.

He said it was "based on a non sequitur" and that the opposition "might just as well ask if we are going to reinforce our delegation to the Vatican and help from that side."

"A stupid answer," snapped an irate opposition MP.

External Affairs Minister Don Jamieson later in the house denounced the slaughter of missionairies in Rhodesia by black guerrilas as "shocking and represensible".

He said he has made strong representations to Cuba about the training of guerrillas and over its troops in Angola.

John Diefenbaker and Jamieson enlivened the proceedings with a crackling exchange.

Diefenbaker said Canada should protest in the strongest terms the "outrageous conduct" of Cuba in mobilizing the insurgents of various countries acting as the agent of the Soviet Union.

Jamieson said he has already made such strong representations to Cuba.

He had voiced Canada's protests in Parliament.

He said Canada has made it clear that this country opposes Cuban intervention in Angola and had asked that the Cuban troops be recalled immediately.

Diefenbaker said there had been no protest made to the Soviet Union. Jamieson said he had made no direct representation to the USSR but he had voiced protests to Cuba.

"What was their reply," asked Diefenbaker.

Jamieson said "I do not think that is the kind of answer I can give in the question period."

He added that he had voiced Canada's protests to Cuba within the last three or four weeks.

Socreds Back Que. Rights

OTTAWA (FP) — The Social Credit Party of Canada has opened its campaign for six spring by-elections — five of them in Quebec — by outlining a program based on more power to the provinces.

Party Leader Andre Fortin told a news conference yesterday the Socreds would have good "local" candidates in all six ridings and that the nomination conventions would come "fairly soon."

He said the theme of vesting more constitutional power in the provinces was chosen because it would likely be the key issue in the by-election in light of the recent election of the pro-independence Parti Quebecois.

Skilled Labor Shortage Seen

OTTAWA (CP) — Despite high levels of unemployment, manufacturers still consider shortages of skilled labor to be the main source of production difficulties, says a Statistics Canada survey released Wednesday.

The survey shows that 10 per cent of the manufacturers questioned see skilled labor shortages as their chief production problem, while another nine per cent say lack of raw materials is the chief difficulty.

Responding to the survey were 6,000 establishments accounting for 50 per cent of all domestic manufacturing shipments.

Statistics Canada reported Tuesday that actual unemployment last month totalled 889,000 and the seasonally-adjusted jobless rate was 7.5 per cent, the highest for a January since 1961.

Of the firms surveyed, 75 per cent said they faced no production difficulties. This compares with 67 per cent who said they had no problems in January, 1976.

GOV'T HIT ON CURB

OTTAWA (CP) — The government was accused Wednesday of showing its inability to manage its business in the Commons by resorting twice to time limits on debate on proposed income tax changes.

Opposition House leaders Walter Baker of the Conservatives and Stanley Knowles of the New Democrats said Liberals had to limit the debates "because of its failure to plan the business of the House."

Adrien Lambert (SC-Bellechasse), commenting on the government's move to silence John Rodriguez (NDP-Nickel Belt), said setting time limits was "a dictator's tool."

The NDP have attacked the bill because they say it benefits only the rich.

Boxer Gets Another Life Term

PATERSON, N.J. — Rubin Carter and John Artis have been sentenced to life imprisonment for a second time for the murder of three men in a Paterson tavern 11 years ago. Judge Bruno Leopizzi Wednesday gave the former middleweight boxer two consecutive and one concurrent life prison terms, making him eligible for parole in 1995. Artis, was sentenced to three concurrent life terms making him eligible for parole in 1981, since he has also served 10 years.

SAN FRANCISCO — Marc Salinger, 28-year-old son of Pierre Salinger, press secretary to president John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson, leaped to his death Wednesday from the Golden Gate Bridge. He was the third person to leap to death from the bridge in the last two days.

WINNIPEG — A Canadian tour by Rusian violinist Igor Oistrakh has been cancelled, apparently because of an international dispute over artists who defect to the West. The tour was to have included performances with orchestras in Halifax, Quebec City, Ottawa, Winnipeg, Calgary and Victoria.

LOS ANGELES — Actor Dale Robertson, 53, was sued for divorce Wednesday by his fourth wife, Lulu Mae, 44. They were married in 1959 and separated last September. Her divorce petition said they had reached agreement on property settlement and custody of their daughter, Rebel Lea, 16.

LOS ANGELES — Singer Ray Charles filed suit Wednesday against producers of a television show, A Touch of Gold II, saying they failed to pay him a $5,000 fee promised for appearing on the show two years ago. Charles demanded $500,000 in compensation and damages from SRO productions, Sam Riddle and Kip Walton.

BEVERLY HILLS — The tales of an amorous ape, a tenacious boxer, a booze-soaked rock musician, a suicidal anchorman, a wandering singer and an historic political scandal held the favored positions for the top Oscar nominations today.

The annual academy award derby, with its rewards for the egos and bank accounts of movie people and studios, formally begins with the nominations announced in the Motion Picture Academy's shiny glass headquarters on Wilhire Boulevard.

Favorites to get nominations in the best picture category included Network and A Star is Born, which was awarded five Golden Globes two weeks ago by the Hollywood Foreign Press Association.

All the President's Men, the Robert Redford-Dustin Hoffman treatment of the reporting that helped break the Watergate scandal was a top ranked contender, along with Rocky, Sylvester Stallone's portrait of a never-say-dive boxer.

Other possibles were King Kong, Taxi Driver, The Omen, and Bound for Glory, the story of folk singer Woody Guthrie.

Peter Finch, the British actor who died last month, won a Golden Globe for best actor for his portrayal of the maddened anchorman in Network, and could be nominated for a posthumous Oscar too.

Network was also expected to win nominations for director Sidney Lumet, writer Paddy Chayefsky, William Holden for his moving performance as a television news executive facing the end of his career, and Faye Dunaway for her portrayal of a heartlessly ambitious executive.

If awards by others offered clues to what the academy members would do —and the Hollywood movie makers don't always follow where others lead — Barbra Streisand and Kris Kristofferson were favorites. They walked off with the Golden Globes for best actor and actress in a musical or comedy for A Star Is Born, the third version of the film about an entertainer on his way down in a bottle while his girl is on her way up.

Members of the academy make nominations in their own fields — actors for acting, directors for directing, cinematographers for camera work and so on through the technical specialties.

Piracy Charge Follows Slap

MIAMI, Fla. — A Texas oilman who is alleged to have ignored warnings to "cut that out" has been charged under the federal air piracy law with slapping the behinds of two stewardesses.

Stewardess Patti DeWoody told U.S. Magistrate Charlene Sorrentino that one of four blows she received during a Jan. 20 London-to-Miami flight was so strong that she almost fell.

"I told him each time, 'Cut that out,' and he mimicked me," the National Airlines stewardess testified Tuesday.

Stewardess Jane Otto testified that the oilman, Audrey Bumgard, 45, slapped her twice.

Bumgard of Galveston, Tex., is a drilling supervisor on the North Sea project off the coast of Scotland. He was not in court Tuesday, having posted $1,000 bond and returned to work. His lawyer spoke for him.

After the third slap, Miss DeWoody testified, she told the pilot and he warned Bumgard to stop.

A few minutes later, however, she felt another whack on her backside and turned to confront Bumgard again.

Miss Otto said she thought Bumgard had had a few drinks before he boarded and that when she served him she "had poured out only a little of each drink."

Magistrate Sorrentino ordered the case held over for a grand jury.

Bumgard is charged under the federal air piracy law, which makes it a felony for any air passenger to intimidate or assault a crew member so as to interfere with his or her duties.

It is a felony punishable by 20 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Mental Tests After Crash Give-Away

MONTREAL — A 34-year-old man is undergoing psychiatric examination this week after police found him handing out crips $100 bills as tips to Montreal waitresses, store clerks and taxi drivers.

The man inherited $15,000 recently from the estate of his dead mother, police said. He had $3,000 left in $100 bills when he was picked up inside a downtown restaurant.

The money has been placed in a bank by police who are awaiting a psychiatric report from the Royal Victoria Hospital before returning it to him.

Police were called to the restaurant by a taxi driver who recieved a $100 tip after letting the man out in front of the restaurant.

Police said the same man was arrested at another restaurant Jan. 28 after he poured a pot of hot coffee over a customer's head. He was sentenced to three days in jail for grievious assault.

A police spokesman said the department will attempt to recover as much of the money as possible.

"We will try to convince the people that the man who gave them the money was sick."

King Laid Up

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — King Khaled of Saudi Arabia is suffering from an undisclosed ailment in his left leg and requires surgery, the Saudi state radio reported Wednesday. It said the 62-year-old monarch will fly to an unspecified European capital Friday for treatment.

Leiva Family Back Home...To Stay

PRINCE GEORGE — The Ricardo Leiva family ended a trip of more than 15 hours here Wednesday night, welcomed by about 20 people who helped them return to Canada.

The family is starting a new life in Prince George — for the second time in about three years — but this time as landed immigrants.

The adults at the homecoming drank Spanish wine from a leather wineskin, and then all went for a private celebration.

The family will stay with friends until Leiva is able to find work and they can find a place of their own.

They had little to say upon their arrival except they are happy to be back in Canada.

If's "very, very nice — very, very good," Leiva, 35, said over and over again during a stopover Wednesday at Vancouver International Airport on the way to Prince George from Madrid.

Leiva, his wife Carmen, daughter Marcia, 10, and son Ricardo, 7, first arrived in Canada in 1973 after the overthrow of the Salvador Allende government in Chile. They came on visitor's visas.

Both parents found work in Prince George, Leiva as a laborer with the British Columbia Railway.

When discovered by immigration officials, they were given the choice of being deported to Chile, or going to a country such as Spain and applying from there for landed immigrant status. Last July, they went to Spain.

"I have very good friends in Prince George," said Leiva. "The whole time we were away they sent money."

The friends also provided money for the plane fare back to Canada.

"The problem is there is no work for tourists, just for Spanish people," said Leivo.

"There are a lot of strikes there and lots of problems every day."

Mrs. Leiva, red-eyed from exhaustion and tears, said the family lived in one room while in Madrid, ate very bad food, and did not send the children to school because it was too expensive.

Leiva, a bank official in Chile, intends to re-apply for his former job.

Royal introduces an independent arbitrator system

NOW AVAILABLE!
Ask your independent agent about our new AUTOSHIELD plan.

At Royal, we make insurance work like a bridge. If you have a loss, we want you to have the means to replace it quickly.

But sometimes it happens there's a disagreement over the proposed settlement and you don't feel satisfied.

That's why Royal introduces a "first" to Canadian insurance: an independent arbitrator system called the ROYAL-AIDE PLAN. You may obtain details of the Plan from your local Royal office.

It provides an independent decision expert that our personal auto and property policyholders can choose themselves—to arbitrate those disagreements where neither the validity of the policy nor the good will of the insured is in dispute, and bring them to a speedy, satisfactory solution.

You'll probably never need ROYAL-AIDE.

But it's good to know when we say insurance works like a bridge, we'll do everything we can to make sure it keeps working that way.

Clothing Probe Confusing

OTTAWA (CP) — Witnesses before the federal textile and clothing board have presented "confusing and contradictory" evidence about the effect of clothing imports on the domestic industry, board chairman Gordon Bennett said Wednesday.

Bennett, at the close of a month-long series of public and private hearings into problems in the clothing and textile industry, asked all interested parties — unions, manufacturers, retailers, importers and consumer groups — to make a final brief submission to the board outlining practical solutions.

Industry Minister Jean Chretien imposed quotas on imported clothing last November, rolling back the number of foreign-made garments allowed into the country this year to 1975 levels. He made the decision after being convinced by industry representatives that a dramatic increase in imports in 1976 would lead to massive layoffs if allowed to continue.

But consumer groups, importers and retailers have all said the action is certain to drive up prices since there will be shortages of many items, particularly lower-priced goods which Canadian manufacturers find uneconomical to produce.

Holding the imports this year to 1975 levels amounts to about a 35-per-cent reduction from what would have come in.

Chretien said the quotas are necessary to protect the jobs of Canadian textile and clothing workers. The industry normally employs about 200,000, mostly in the high-unemployment areas of Quebec and eastern Ontario.

The industry has said it cannot compete with the prices of goods from cheap-labor countries such as Taiwan and Korea where workers earn one-tenth what Canadian workers earn.

Imports accounted for more than half the garments sold in Canada last year and the government wants to know how the trend can be stopped without pushing prices too high.

The textile and clothing board, set up in 1970 to hear industry complaints about damage from imports, has heard opinions on what's wrong with the industry and how to solve it from more than 100 associations and companies.

Because the evidence is so contradictory, the board will compare what it has heard with what its statistics say before making recommendations to Chretien in June.

"Obviously this has got to be a political decision," said Bennett in an interview.

He said in his closing remarks the board has heard conflicting evidence such as:

—Assertions from domestic manufacturers they can provide goods demanded by Canadian consumers at a wide range of prices and complaints from retailers and importers that this is not possible, particularly in lower-priced clothing;

—Suggestions that there is a shortage of skilled labor and assertions that there is plenty of skilled labor assured by training programs.

Few members of the public attended the hearings, held in Montreal, Halifax, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Ottawa. But industry lobbyists for the manufacturers, importers and retailers were keen observers.

Higher Court Trial Set In Slaying

A 30-year-old Esquimalt man has been committed to higher court trial on a charge of murder.

John Edward Aitken, a former waiter in the Halfway House beer parlor who lived at 707 Esquimalt Road, was committed after a four-day preliminary hearing which ended Wednesday in Victoria provincial court before Judge Harold Alder.

Aitken was charged with first-degree murder while committing rape after the body of 30-year-old Marie Alice Monique Nordelli Dhilon of 2349 Dowler Place was found Sept. 9 in tall grass near Macaulay Point, Esquimalt.

Outside the courtroom, defence lawyer Gordon Macdonald said the trial is expected to get under way Feb. 21 in the supreme court.

ESCAPER GETS TWO MONTHS

A 29-year-old man was sentenced in Victoria county court Wednesday to two months in jail for escaping from Wilkinson Road jail Dec. 16, 1975.

Kenneth Moorhouse had been free on a habeas corpus application April 29, 1976, but failed to appear for trial Oct. 6. He was arrested recently in Nanaimo.

Indecency Nets Teacher Day in Jail

A 41-year-old school teacher, whose professional career was described in county court Wednesday as "finished," was sentenced to a nominal one day in jail for gross indecency with a 13-year-old boy.

James Arthur Bird, 4775 Spring, was charged Aug. 12 with committing an act of "gross indecency, fellatio" with the boy. He pleaded guilty.

Court was told Bird admitted having performed various homosexual acts with the boy on five previous occasions. All took place at the home of the accused who was a Grade 7 teacher at Tolmie Elementary until last June. The boy was a student at the school.

Harsh Winter Cost $200M

SWADDLED HOUSE BEAT THE COLD

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — Mike Eds says he has hardly noticed the cold during this coldest winter in years, and he's used only one-fourth the fuel it would normaly take to heat a house the size of his.

But then a normal house doesn't have triple-glazed windows, three inches of insulation inside the doors, and copper plates absorbing sunlight on the roof.

Edds is resident engineer of Solar Habitat 1, an experiment in alternate-energy housing at the University of Massachusetts here. As part of the deal, he and his wife Peggy live in the house rent-free.

The habitat isn't finished yet, and neither the 200 square feet of copper plate nor the 60-foot windmill that runs a wind furnace are fully operational.

Even so, Edds said, the features did their job.

"I didn't really notice the cold. I took readings and the preliminary results showed that we used one-fourth the amount of heat a normal house this size would use during the first two weeks of January. That was primarily because of the specially-designed insulation."

Walls and floors are insulated with six inches of fiberglass, the roof panels have eight inches of fiberglass. There is one inch of polystyrene insulation on the outside of the wood walls, and over that is a fiberglass mesh and a compound of cement and plastic.

The harsh winter has been profitable for many snow-related industries, but probably has cost Ontario residents about $200 million so far.

Retailers say sales of snowblowers and firewood are running high and stocks of winter clothing and snowmobiles have been depleted.

Most of the estimated $200-million price tag comes from higher heating expenses. The bill also includes increases in transportation and road maintenance costs.

Environment Canada says the number of "degree days" between last July and Jan. 31 was up about 500.

A common measuring tool in the heating industry, the degree day is based on the assumption that no heating is required when the daily mean temperature is 18 degrees Celsius or higher.

The number of degree days accumulated on any given date is calculated by subtracting the day's mean temperature from 18 C.

The average increase of about 500 degree days means a jump of about $50 for each of Ontario's 2.7 million households, or a province-wide increase of $135 million in residential heating bills.

Higher transportation costs are mainly the result of less-efficient operation of internal combustion engines in cold weather and increases in gasoline purchases.

A spokesman for the Ontario ministry of transportation said the bill for winter maintenance of provincial highways will be about $5 million higher than original estimates, with most of the increase coming from added labor costs for road crews.

The total estimate for road maintenance costs to all levels of government is $15 million.

Snowplow and removal companies are doing a solid business, but some managers feel that commercial industries are not using snow removal services as much as previously. Snowplowing contracts do not usually include snow removal, which costs extra.

However, with the heavy snowfalls, more people are investing in snowblowers and are taking up winter sports, buying snowmobiles and cross-country ski equipment.

Firms Remain Closed

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The natural gas shortage could keep thousands of small U.S. factories closed in seven states east of the Mississippi River until the end of the summer, mostly because the pipelines serving those states will take that long to refill in near-empty storage fields.

"Getting gas into the pipelines with big storage requirements is going to be a problem we'll have to live with until the end of summer," Federal Power Commissioner John Holloman said Tuesday in an interview.

"There's only so much gas that can physically be pushed into those storage fields every day, like only so much water can be forced through a hose," he said.

The FPC says natural gas clstomers drew albout 100 billion cubic feet of gas a day from pipelines during December and January. Normally, customers draw 57 billion cubic feet a day, meaning the overtaxed pipelines were drawing their excess requirements from storage.

By the time the heating season is over in April, storage fields that last November had 1.7 trillion cubic feet of gas will be down to about 200 billion cubic feet. Pipelines will have to pump 1.5 trillion cubic feet of gas back into the same storage fields to get them ready for the heating season that starts next November.

Kerosene In Demand

WASHINGTON (WP) — The natural gas shortage has caused so many customers to turn to oil and kerosene for heat that it has triggered a shortage of those two fuels, especially in the upper Midwest where lakes and rivers have been frozen to barge traffic for two months.

Federal Energy Administrator John F. O'Leary told the House subcommittee on energy and power Wednesday that there is now a shortage of heating oil and kerosene in Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and North Dakota. The shortage has occurred partly because the pipeline that carries fuel north to these states cannot carry any more and partly because barges cannot move on Lake Michigan and the upper Mississippi.

Super Batteries Planned

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Electric utilities and their customers may reap the first big benefits from super batteries now coming off the drawing board, but experts believe the development will make electric cars practical within a few years.

Authorities at the U.S. energy research and development administration said it may take orders from the utilities, where batteries can help solve power generation problems, to promote construction of factories that ultimately would provide electric car batteries as well.

The new battery designs may give electric cars a range of 100 miles between charges in the early 1980s and allow them to travel for 250 miles at a stretch within the next decade, experts said.

GARDENING

Germination Varies with Color

There is a tendency among gardeners who grow bedding annuals from seed to buy packets of mixed colors in preference to single colors.

Months later, when the plants come into flower, disappointment is expressed because the expected mixture of four or six colors does not materialize.

The blame is laid on the seedsman, the gardener vowing never to buy any more seeds put out by that company.

Yet a change of supply source fails to produce better results and the gardener then decides all seedsmen are tarred with the same brush.

Nice as it may be to blame the other fellow for our failures in this case the fault is our own. The reason for the poor assortment of colors we obtain from seed mixtures is explained when we learn something of plants and plant reproduction from seed.

All the flowering annuals we grow started out as wild plants somewhere on the surface of this planet, and each had a definite color, for example, purple.

Plant scientists discovered a way to split this dominant color, and we now have the same plant in many shades, possibly from white, through pinks and reds, to the original color of purple.

Strange as it may seem, with certain plants this dominant color of purple will appear in all batches of seed regardless of the color of the seed plant, and the seedlings of this original color will be the first to germinate and the fastest to grow.

The color most remote from the wild form, in this case the white, is often very slow to germinate and develop.

Knowing these facts, the seedsmen use what is called a formula mixture, a mixture so compounded as to give approximately the same number of plants of each color.

Seed of the dominating color (purple in this case) are excluded because they will turn up regardless, and the number of seed of each other color included in the mixture will depend on their normal percentage of germination and the average ability of the seedlings to survive.

When the seed is sown indoors in a seed box, the first to germinate will be the purples, and these will make rapid growth. If nothing is disturbed, these will be the large seedlings the gardener pricks out, and often the rest are discarded as not worth keeping.

If these first seedlings are carefully removed to a larger box, the others that have germinated will have room to develop, and still others may germinate within the next week.

To obtain a reasonable assortment of colors, the gardener must select some of each kind of seedling, the strong and the weak, the fast and the slow growing.

At the same time, the experienced gardener will look for any differences in foliage color, because the color of leaves is often a clue to flower color.

The only way to obtain complete satisfaction is to buy packets of separate colors, sow the quantity needed of each color, and plant out the different colors to suit personal taste.

While the initial investment in seed will be greater than for one packet of mixture, the seed of most annuals can be stored for several years. When the cost is spread over three or four years it is nearly the same as for packets of mixed seed, but the effect of the planted beds give far greater satisfaction.

ARDMORE GOLF COURSE IS ideal for retired men and women, other courses in the region have either too many hills or are too blessed long. HOSPITAL AUXILIARY EARNS $100,000

The auxiliary at Royal Jubilee Hospital has earned $100,000 for the second year in a row, to be turned over to the hospital for extra equipment.

The gift actually represents much more in dollar value to the hospital because the provincial government provides a one-third grant for general equipment and will pay one-half to three-quarters for major diagnostic equipment.

"The board and all the staff feel immensely indebted to the ladies of the auxiliary," Dr. A. C. Pickles, Jubilee's executive director, said today. "Their phenomenal success is in direct proportion to their amount of hard work."

At the auxiliary's annual meeting this week president Betty Scroggs said the hospital administration has asked that actual selection of equipment be delayed for the time being.

But the auxiliary has been able to promise the hospital $100,000, as it did the previous year, she said.

Each year the hospital provides the auxiliary with a list of needed equipment and the auxiliary chooses which items it will buy.

The auxiliary has 290 members, 175 of them active, and has an average turnout at its meetings of 76.

It operates a gift shop in Jubilee, another shop at Memorial Pavilion and runs a mobile wagon throughout patient wards. It also runs a thrift shop downtown and holds an annual bazaar.

A visiting committee visited 4,381 patients last year, delivering flowers to 333 of them.

Normal Relations Resume Between Spain, Russia

Washington Post

MADRID — Spain resumed formal diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union Wednesday in an historic decision intended to wipe out remnants of fear and hostility against the Communist power dating back to the 1936-39 Spanish civil war.

The decision, which aroused bitter criticism from the anti-Communist extreme right, was among the most important taken by King Juan Carlos and his government in their deliberate campaign to bury the nightmarish memory of the bloody right-against-left conflict and turn Spain into a modern democratic state that can join the European Common Market and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Moscow, however, is adamantly opposed to Spain's joining NATO.

The United States maintains bases in Spain, which is linked to the Western defence alliance through a treaty with Washington.

NATO excluded Spain from membership during the Francisco Franco dictatorship because of his links to the Axis powers during the Second World War.

Since Juan Carlos succeeded Franco 14 months ago, NATO members have made it clear they would welcome a democratic Spain into the alliance.

For followers of Franco, the Soviet Union is Spain's principal foreign enemy because of Moscow's support of the ill-fated Spanish republic in its struggle to put down Franco's military uprising.

To this day, rightists raise the spectre of the civil war to attack the Soviet Union, all domestic and foreign Communists, and democracy, which rightists call a system that opens the way for a Communist takeover.

SECRET REPORT QUERIED

Heavy Layoff Scare Hits Forest Industry

A report commissioned by the provincial government indicates as many as 7,500 coastal forest workers could be laid off over the next 10 years unless company profits increase, a spokesman for Pemberton Securities said today.

This would be nearly 25 per cent of the numbers now employed.

The report, which has not been made public by the government, says companies face high costs in converting existing sawmills to handle smaller timber and in constructing new pulp mills, which cost upwards of $300 million each.

Content of the report was made public by Liberal leader Grodon Gibson Wednesday but he said as many as 15,000 of the 30,000 coastal woodworkers could be laid off.

A Pemberton spokesman today said the figure should probably be about 7,500.

The layoffs would come unless forest companies could generate more funds than they currently earn in order to finance plant expansion.

Both Gibson and Jack Munro, regional president of the International Woodworkers of America, were critical today of what they termed the "secrecy" surrounding the report.

"If this is a dire picture of the forest industry, we needed to be working on it yesterday," the Liberal leader said.

Gibson said he doesn't object to the government getting Pemberton to do the report but said the claim by Economic Development Minister Don Phillips that the report will not be made public because it contains confidential financial data on forest firms is nonsense.

He said when Pemberton prepared its submission to the Pearse forestry commission the companies involved were not identified.

Munro said he is disturbed about the timing of the "leak" on the report — shortly before negotiations between the IWA and the forest industry are slated to start.

The IWA leader said it is just another example of the provincial government's policy of conducting all its business in secrecy.

Munro said, despite what the report says, statistics show that housing starts in the U.S., even with the bad weather, are up to the level of 1973, which was regarded as a particularly good year.

He said this would seem to be a good trend for the B.C. forest industry, which is very dependent on the U.S. market.

"The only way we can find out anything is if it is leaked," he said. "I don't know what the hell this government thinks it is doing to the people of the province. We are entitled to better treatment than this where everything is done in secrecy."

However, Ian Barclay, president of British Columbia Forest Products Ltd. today told the Times his company shares some of the concerns expressed in the Pemberton report but does not plan layoffs.

He said his company has, in fact, hired 1,000 additional

Cabbie, Passenger Killed

A 19-year-old Colwood taxi driver and his 58-year-old passenger were killed early today in a two-car collision at the intersection of Millstream and the Trans-Canada Highway.

Three persons in the other car escaped with minor injuries.

The passenger was identified as Gustav Niclaus Becker, of 2110 Millstream.

Police said the taxi was crossing Millstream at 1:30 a.m. when it was hit broadside by a vehicle driven by Dennis Sharpe, 17, of Duncan.

When police arrived, the taxi was against a light standard on the northeast corner of the intersection and the car in a ditch nearby.

Police said Becker and the cab driver were pronounced dead on arrival at Victoria General Hospital.

Sharpe, and two passengers in his car, Ronald Boxem, 18, of Mill Bay, and Charles Harrison, 19, of Cowichan Station, were taken to Victoria General Hospital where they are reported in good condition.

Police said Sharpe suffered broken ribs, Boxem, broken teeth and cuts, and Harrison a slight concussion and possible broken jaw.

'Vigilante' Fund Set To Curb Hold-Ups

The Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce is starting a fund to reward people who help capture crooks in what is shaping up as a "vigilante" effort to curb a spree of hold-ups.

First to benefit will be three boys who caught a man trying to rob a Colwood store Tuesday night. The chamber will reward them with $50 each.

Chamber president Alan Emery said today members will be asked for donations. Most people are concerned about the number of such crimes in Greater Victoria recently and the fact there are not enough policemen around to protect everybody, he said.

There have been 18 hold-ups or attempted hold-ups in the Capital district so far this year, far above average.

Tuesday night Kevin Gilbertson, 16, held a would-be robber at bay by threatening him with a karate chop while two friends ran for police. Kevin admited later he didn't know any karate moves.

Morris Armand Dupuis 37, living in a Colwood trailer court, pleaded guilty in court Wednesday to robbery and will be sentenced next month.

An officer said later police would never advise trying what the boys did but the trio could certainly not be faulted for their courage. It turned out that Dupuis was unarmed.

The idea for the reward fund comes from buinessman Sidney Kovnats who said he will be happy to contribute the first $50.

"Little old staid Victoria is getting to be quite a rough town . . . people are saying, 'what's going on?'" he said.

He said businessmen working together "almost like a vigilante group" would support such a fund and be "good neighbors to the police."

Koynats said he understands such a fund was started by the public in Phoenix and cut the crime rate.

People are interested in helping, they just don't know how to go about it, he said.

"I'm sure every business will contribute, even if it's only a couple of bucks. Right now everyone's scared out of their wits."

Double Rescue Saves 5, Dog

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Five men and a dog aboard a sinking tug were saved today in a two-stage rescue operation.

Initially saved were four men.

But rescue officials were called back to the tug after a radio report indicated there was yet another man aboard.

It turned out there was — but the man, and a dog, had climbed aboard the still afloat tug after his nearby fishing vessel went down.

The action began at 2 a.m. when a May Day call was received from the New Westminster tug Mainland Fury.

The message said there were four men aboard and that the engine had failed. The seas were heavy and the crew of the 38-foot wooden tug had cut its tow — a barge carrying heavy logging equipment.

The helpless tug was wallowing in seas on the west side of Calvert Island, about 40 miles north of Vancouver Island.

The Pacific Rescue Co-ordination Centre alerted the Prince Rupert-based ministry of transport buoy tender Alexander Mackenzie and the B.C. ferry Queen of Prince Rupert.

The ferry reported she was only 50 minutes away from the tug. She rescued the four crewmen who were taken, unharmed, to Kelsey Bay.

But fears that not all the crew had been rescued were raised at 7:50 a.m. when the Alert Bay radio station reported there was another man aboard the hulk of the tug, radioing for help.

The rescue centre issued a general marine broadcast to which the train transport Alaska, on a run between Alaska and Vancouver, responded.

The Alaska soon reported she could see a man aboard the crippled tug but doubted, because of the angry seas, that she would be able to rescue him.

The rescue, however, was finally carried out. Rescued was Roger Skidmore, who with his dog, was alone in his 26-foot fishing vessel, the Diana Gay, when the vessel began sinking.

Skidmore and his dog dove over the side and swam to the tug.

DEADLY GERMS FOR SALE

LONDON (Reuter) — A British government research centre is offering deadly germs for sale by the kilogram (2.2 pounds) to anyone who applies, an opposition member of Parliament alleged Wednesday.

Michael Shersby told reporters he will question ministers in the House of Commons concerning an advertisement, in the magazine Nature, headed "bacteria by the kilogram . . . to any destination" from the Porton Down research centre in England's southern Wiltshire region.

He said he will ask whether the government is satisfied the bacteria wil not fall into the hands of "terrorists."

The advertisement, in the magazine's December issue, asked about $260 for 100 grams (3.5 ounces) of haemophilus influenza and $111 for a kilogram of eschericia coli. A Pharmaceutical Society spokesman has described them as "highly toxic."

Other items in the advertisement simply were described as "especially toxic proteins."

M.E.L. Paving Not Part Of Inquiry—Chairman

The controversial M.E.L. Paving case will likely not come before the royal commission inquiry into B.C. Railway's operations, the commission chairman said Wednesday.

Mr. Justice Lloyd McKenzie, one of three commissioners appointed by the cabinet, said the inquiry's primary purpose is to determine whether the BCR is operating in a viable fashion and achieving its objectives.

The M.E.L. case would sidetrack the commission's work, he said.

Mr. Justice MacKenzie also said he can't see the M.E.L. Paving case as meeting the allegations of fraud that have been made, but if it should prove relevant to the commission investigation it will be included.

The judge also said the commission is prepared to call on anyone in connection with the investigation. This would include such figures as former premier W. A. C. Bennett.

NDP LMA Bill King told the legislature Wednesday the M.E.L. case should specifically be included in the terms of refence for the royal commission to make sure it doesn't get left out.

He also said that one of the commissioners, Sydney Welch, is a member of the Social Credit party and questioned whether the public would regard him as impartial.

Welch confirmed he is a member of the party, but said he was chosen because of his background in construction and labor. Welch is president of Premier Cablevision.

King also charged that the third commissioner, Dave Chapman, had told a radio station that he (Chapman) doubted the commission would look into M.E.L.

But the radio station later reported that Chapman had said only that the M.E.L. court case as such wouldn't be reviewed, although the M.E.L. situation in general would be thoroughly aired.

In an interview Wednesday in Victoria, Economic Development Minister Don Phillips said the former NDP government made a settlement with a contractor on cost over-runs which ultimately cost BCR almost $10 million.

Phillips said that on Dec. 10, 1975 — the day before the last provincial general election — the NDP government made a deal involving extra payments to Keen Industries Ltd. and a subsidiary, K. R. M. Construction, both of Edmonton.

The minister said the deal — for moving materials and for increases in the contracted price of future work — was identical to the circumstances surrounding the railway's settlement with M.E.L. Paving.

"It was the same kind of contract, the same specifications, the same terminology, they were faced with the same over-runs, the same inflation," said Phillips. "Why do they (the NDP opposition) say there was fraud with M.E.L. and settle with Keen? If there was fraud with M.E.L. there was fraud with Keen, too."

Phillips said that minutes of

BCR Faces $1B Debt?

VANCOUVER (CP) — An unnamed cabinet minister says the provincial cabinet has been told B.C. Railway will need $1 billion in capital in the next five years, according to the Vancouver Sun.

The cabinet minister said this is one of the major reasons for the decision by Premier Bill Bennett to appoint a royal commission into all facets of the Crown-owned railway.

The cabinet minister said another option for BCR would be its sale to Canadian National Railways.

No details were given on the capital expenditures.

The cabinet source said the government is concerned that the vast expenditures by BCR that are anticipated in development of northern B.C. should be justified. Interest on the $1 billion which would have to be borrowed over the next five years — beginning

'DANGEROUS COURSE'

Paul Weiler, chairman of B.C.'s streamlined Labor Relations Board, feels Ottawa is on a dangerous course in its preparations to abandon wage and price controls. Times reporter Mike Hughes interviewed Weiler, who feels B.C. is the cutting edge for labor-management relations in North America. See story on Page 7.

MPs GAS THEMSELVES

John Reynolds (left) and Ken Robinson squirted the gas which is used to calm prisoners and, at the end of the demonstration found that their eyes were sore and streaming.

Use of the gas, in the amount claimed necessary, is excessive, they said.

PQ Urged To Abolish English

QUEBEC CITY (UPI) — A French organization claiming a million members has urged the separatist Parti Quebecois government to abolish all English-language rights in the province except in education.

The proposal was submitted to the government Wednesday by the Mouvement Quebec Francais.

It asked the government to abolish parts of the British North America Act that guarantee the right to use English in the National Assembly, Quebec's legislature and in the courts. The rights have been in effect since 1867 under the BNA, Canada's constitution.

The MQF urged the government to create a new law, which could not be amended, making French the official language of Quebec. Such a law would officially entrench French as the language of government, business and work.

The brief was submitted to Cultural development Minister Camille Laurin, who is drafting a new language policy. Laurin is expected to present new language legislation to replace Bill 22, the current law.

B.C. Milk Board Creaming Consumers

VANCOUVER — Milk drinkers are being creamed by the B.C. Milk Board, according to two Simon Fraser University professors, because of the board's tight control over prices.

In their book, The Real Cost of the B.C. Milk Board, Herbert Grubel and Richard Schwindt say the board is to blame because:

—Milk costs more in Vancouver than anywhere else in urban Canada and more than in any of the major Pacific Coast U.S. cities.

—The cost per quart is rising faster here than in those places.

—It is tough for new farmers to become established in the dairy business.

The book says marketing boards, "like any cartel, are able artificially to maintain prices above the free market level by restricting the supply of the product . . ."

(Comparative retail prices for a quart of milk as of last November: Vancouver, 60.3 cents; Calgary, 53.5 cents; Regina, 51.5 cents; Seattle, 49.7 cents (in Canadian equivalents); Portland, 42.2 cents; Los Angeles, 42.5 cents.)

The restriction, they say is the quota system, a part of which is a prerequisite to membership in the "cartel."

They say farmers can become members of the board only by purchasing an existing quota. They put the price, for a "typical" farm with 50 cows, at up to $87,500.

They say the milk board in 1975 cost B.C. milk users $12 million in subsidies to farmers whose production is controlled by the board, and conclude that direct subsidization of needy farmers ("treating them just like the urban recipients of welfare relief") would be much cheaper and more efficient.

The authors claim that marketing boards, "by nature, are unlikely to serve the public interest" and that as a system for subsidizing the farm sector they are inequitable, inefficient and ineffective.

"The tax burden implicit in the higher prices that consumers must pay . . . falls on all consumers regardless of income (and) it is therefore a 'regressive' tax . . ."

The authors figure the time is ripe for dumping the milk board — and any other marketing boards.

Officials of the B.C. Milk Board said Wednesday they had not read the book and could not comment.

PM 'Too Busy' To Read Report

By IAIN HUNTER
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Conservative MPs demanded in the Commons Wednesday that the government take action against officers of a Canadian Crown corporation's Swiss subsidiary accused of unacceptable and possibly illegal business practices.

However, Prime Minister Trudeau said he was too busy to read the report of a special inquiry into the activities of Polysar Ltd.'s Swiss subsidiary which disclosed the unacceptable procedures.

The report to Polysar, the Crown-owned producer of synthetic rubber, plastics and petrochemicals, condemned the practices of Polysar International S.A. involving total rebates or similar payments to its customers and distributors since 1970.

On receiving the report, Polysar ordered the Swiss company to cease these practices immediately.

The report said that the procedures could have resulted in evasion of foreign exchange control regulations in many countries, tax evasion, defrauding of minority shareholders, and violation of prohibitions against currency transfers.

Commons public accounts committee chairman Allan Lawrence said the report also hinted that officers of the Crown subsidiary may have been enjoying similar windfall opportunities, and called for a full public inquiry by his committee.

In the House, James Gillies (PC—Don Valley) noted that the prime minister was alerted about the questionable transactions in 1973 and called on the government to inform other countries involved of the names of the companies taking part so that the foreign governments could take appropriate action.

Trudeau said it appears that foreign companies have broken laws in other countries and that no action can be taken against Canadian companies "if they did not act illegally or improperly."

Gillies argued that only the co-operation of a Canadian Crown Corporation allowed the foreign companies to break the law in their own countries.

The prime minister replied that he wants to be sympathetic "to the wave of purity" apparent among the Conservatives, but said he wanted to look at the facts before answering what he called a hypothetical question.

Lawrence, Conservative MP for Northumberland-Durham, noted that the report was hand delivered to Trudeau's office five hours before the Commons met, and that the prime minister should be able to answer questions about it.

Trudeau said he may be too busy to have read it by the time the House meets today but promised to do his best.

Finance Minister Donald Macdonald said that the Canada Development Corporation, which controls Polysar, may have to censure the officers of the company, but said he could not be sure until he has read the report.

OTTAWA ASSISTANCE NOT PASSED ON

Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm confirmed Wednesday that B.C. is not passing on an increase it is receiving from the federal government for pensions to the handicapped.

The money amounts to $22.50 a month for each handicapped person in the province.

Vander Zalm was replying in the legislature to questions asked last week by Liberal Leader Gordon Gibson.

The minister said the government periodically receives more money from Ottawa for various programs, but it does not make decisions on how much to pay various classes of recipients on that basis.

Decisions are made on the basis of needs of groups involved, he said, and the government is conducting a study of the needs of the handicapped.

4 IRA Bombers Jailed Total Of 600 Years

Times News Services

LONDON — Four gunmen of the Irish Republican Army who for 18 months waged a terror campaign of murder and bombing in England were sentenced today to life imprisonment 47 times over, and to additional prison terms totalling more than 600 years among them.

The four — Martin O'Connell, Edward Butler, Harry Duggan and Hugh Doherty — were found guilty Wednesday of 25 counts of murder and bombing.

The judge, Sir Joseph Cantlay, who at the start of the 13-day trial was told he was on the terrorists' death list, said the four should serve not less than 30 years each on the murder charges.

In Britain, a life sentence can be reviewed and shortened at any time by the home secretary, and judges frequently recommend the minimum time they feel should be served.

The convictions put the police on the alert for a new wave of bombing. One Scotland Yard officer reported: "We expect the IRA to hit back at any moment. . . The terrorists have already publicly stated they plan a bombing campaign far worse than anything they have done before."

The four refused to enter pleas at the opening of the 13-day trial, which two of them called "a farce."

"We are at war with England," one of the defendants said.

They faced a total of 25 charges, including seven of murder and 13 involving bomb explosions.

They were blamed by the prosecution for a wave of terror bombings and shootings that disrupted life in the London area during late 1975.

Doherty, convicted on 18 charges, received 11 life sentences. The other three, each convicted on 20 charges, received 12 life sentences apiece.

B.C.-Wide Bargaining Sought

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Construction Labor Relations Association wants the provincial government to legislate province-wide bargaining councils for both employers and unions in the building industry.

The association, representing about 850 contractors in B.C., said in a brief to Labor Minister Allan Williams, that this is the only way to restore stability to the troubled industry, which had two strike-lockouts in 1976.

"The government has a responsibility to put legislated meat on the bones of the accreditation system in this province," said the brief, released Wednesday.

The association wants legislation which would enable it to represent all unionized firms in bargaining.

The government should also use existing legislation to create a common bargaining agent for union construction workers in the province; the association says.

The association also says that national or specialty contractors should operate under the same competitive conditions and legal requirements as provincial companies.

the weather

A weather disturbance which developed off the B.C. coast spread cloud and rain to coastal areas and mixed rain and snow in the Interior. As this disturbance moves inland partial clearing is expected, although another weaker disturbance is expected to reach the coast Friday morning followed by another late Friday. Temperatures will continue above the seasonal normals.

HIGH-SPEED TRAIN SET

WASHINGTON (AP) — Amtrak has signed an agreement to lease two high-speed Canadian-built LRC trains for a one-year testing program, beginning on a route from Vancouver, B.C. to Seattle and Portland, Ore.

The LRC, which stands for light, rapid, comfortable, has several advanced technological features, including a tilting-body suspension system that permits operation around curves at higher-than-usual speeds.

Hostage-Taker Studies State Immunity Offer

INDIANAPOLIS — Tony Kiritsis, who has held a real estate executive hostage in an apartment he says is rigged with dynamite since Tuesday morning, today said he was turning an offer of "complete and total" immunity over to three attorneys to decide if it is valid.

He said he would not make any move until the three attorneys, who he described as among the best in the country, had read the letter of immunity and told him it was legal and in proper form.

Kiritsis, 44, made the statement in a telephone call broadcast by radio station WIBC in which he also rattled off another series of complaints against the mortgage company controlled by Richard Hall, his hostage.

"I want vengeance I want those people exposed," he said. Kiritsis contends the mortgage company cheated him.

"I'm not going to come out of here and go to jail," he said. "I want to live as long as any man who ever lived but I'm not afraid to die."

He said that Wednesday night he re-attached a shotgun to Hall's head because he had been upset by a broadcast report that a bomb squad might be preparing to rush his third-floor apartment.

"This man fell asleep and I fell asleep. We were wired together," Kiritsis said.

Deputy Marion county prosecutor George Martz announced Wednesday night that authorities had decided to go along with the immunity offer because "there was no other choice" if they hoped to get Hall out alive.

Meanwhile, a 27-year-old gunman who entered a suburban Washington bank and held eight persons hostage for no apparent reason surrended to police today.

The man, identified as Stephen Gregory, had fired several shots at police and threatened to kill himself after releasing the hostages. But when police entered the bank and told him to lay down the two high-powered rifles he was holding, he followed their instructions and surrendered peacefully.

Police charged Gregory with assault with intent to murder and said further charges would be filed against him later.

Royal Visit Brief

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Queen Elizabeth made a fleeting visit to the United States today on her way to celebrate the major overseas event of her silver jubilee year, a seven-week visit to the British Commonwealth islands in the sunny South Pacific. A jetliner carrying the Queen and Prince Philip stopped here for fuel before dawn in passage from London to Samoa.

Axe Facing Woods Jobs

employees over the past 12 months and now has a total staff of 6,000.

"We expect to have at least 6,000 employees five years from now, assuming that markets continue to be favorable. We cannot make projections beyond that date.

Pat Hrushowy, public affairs director for the B.C. Council of Forest Industries, also expressed surprise at the report of 7,500 layoffs as a possibility for the coastal industry.

"We have never heard projections of layoffs of that magnitude in our discussions with forest companies. I have not read the Pemberton report, however."

The Pemberton report expresses concern about the costs of expanding the pulp industry in particular and states:

"Most new (pulp) facilities today cost nearly $300 million, equivalent to around $800 per annual ton of capacity. This is 2.5 times the $300 per ton of annual capacity associated with building new pulp and paper facilities in the mid to late 1960s. If the forest products industry is to continue to be both self-financing and to maintain its efficiency, enough surplus cash must be generated over the life of the assets to provide for replacement at today's much higher costs."

Pemberton prepared a submission to the Pearse commission on the forest industry in 1976 and was subsequently asked by the department of economic development to elaborate in a separate report. This second report was delivered to the government in the fall but was never made public.

Economic Development Minister Don Phillips said the report could not be made public because it contained statistics from the forest industry companies which the government had agreed to keep confidential.

B.C. Forest's Barclay said that, if productivity increases and markets remain firm, employment could grow or at least remain stable in the forest industry.

He said he could not comment directly on the Pemberton report because he had not read it.

"I see no reason to expect there will be massive layoffs in the coastal industry, at least as far as our company is concerned. However, the public must become aware that we are facing increasing costs and there is a danger that we will not be able to recover enough revenue to meet these costs."

$40,000 Damage In Fire

A candle caused fire which resulted in about $40,000 damage to a duplex at 1713 Fernwood early today.

A Victoria fire department spokesman said Ray Pillon, 17, staying with friends in a basement suite, lit a candle in his bedroom and then went to another room to watch television. When he returned the room was engulfed in flame.

Pillon woke up his friends, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Scott, and the three made their way to safety.

Firemen were at the scene for more than two hours and had to chop through the roof to ventilate smoke and heat.

The building is owned by L. J. Evans of 1720 Fernwood.

SPEC Grant Cut By 80%

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Society for Pollution and Environmental Control (SPEC) has had its provincial government grant cut by 80 per cent, a spokesman for the environmental group said Wednesday.

Gary Gallon, SPEC executive director, said the grant was reduced to $5,000 a year from $25,000 but the cutback will not result in any staff layoffs or deletion of existing SPEC programs. Research capability will be severely hampered.

Gallon also said SPEC received its 1976 grant only a few days ago. SPEC was shuffled for months from the provincial secretary's office, which handed out $25,000 two previous years, to the environment minister who first refused to give SPEC any money and then agreed to the reduced amount.

SPEC raised $20,000 through public donations last year when the provincial government first indicated that the grant would only continue with outside support.

Gallon said that all eight SPEC employees are working on federal work-incentive grants and therefore will not be laid off.

Oh, the Names They Get Called!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Tow-Away Driver Laid Low by Wrench-Wielding Motorist

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Veteran tow truck driver Ben Smith is used to abuse, having lived with it for the past 27 years in his job.

"I guess I've been called every name in the book," says Smith, 46, co-owner of Victoria Super Service. "But it's never bothered me."

Most of the abuse is verbal.

Only once for Smith has it ended in fisticuffs. An irate motorist blew his cork, burst into the towing company's office on Alpha and came at Smith, arms flailing.

Smith lunged, the man tripped and sailed through a plate glass window.

End of argument.

Rick Essler is about a dozen years Smith's junior. He's been in the business 14 years and he's had so many curses hurled at him it's now like water off a duck's back.

"Never a day passes that someone doesn't come into the office screaming and swearing his head off," says Essler, manager of Gordon's Towing.

Women he adds, are often the worst offenders.

Since he took over the job four years ago, he's had his share of discomforting experiences — an attempted bombing, a person smashing down the wire-mesh gate to get at his impounded car.

He's had physical tangles too but nothing quite as bad as what happened to one of his drivers last year.

The driver was hooking up a car to tow it away from a downtown lot when the car owner came along, crept up behind and picked up a wrench.

Whack. The blow hit the luckless driver square on the back of his head and he was discharged from hospital 2½ months later.

"It's a living," says Smith. "Somebody's got to do it."

He tried to leave it once, got a job with an auto wreckers firm, but quit after a couple of months.

"It was so boring. I couldn't stand it. But in this job . . . well, you never know what you're getting into from one moment to the next."

Essler cites the variety as one of the major reason he's in the business. There's also the satisfaction of doing a good job, of successfully meeting a challenge, whether it's picking up the pieces at an accident, or hauling away an illegally parked car from a particularly tight space without damaging the vehicle.

And then there's humor, he says.

Like the case of a Victoria woman who was so upset over her car being impounded that she went over to the vehicle, kicked it in the side, swore at it and scolded "I told you not to park there."

Most people use tow truck drivers as sounding boards, says Essler. Their anger is normally directed at someone else. That's the first and most important thing anyone in the business has to realize.

But for a driver to last in the job, says Smith, he's got to have the right disposition . . . "a real sweet one."

The telephone book lists 31 towing companies in Greater Victoria. Most of the work is handled by the big three — Victoria Super Service, Gordon's and Totem. Tom's towing is in fourth place.

Randy Caton, manager of Totem, says he wouldn't recommend anyone trying to start up a new business these days.

"Unless the person has been operating for five years I'd say forget it. There's nothing left. Everything is pretty well tied up."

The three major firms share the bulk of the work fairly evenly and Essler describes the competition as friendly.

Unlike Vancouver, none of the towing companies here have contracts with the city or municipalities with the exception of Victoria Super Service. It has a contract with Victoria police to remove ticketed cards illegally parked in no-parking 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. zones.

Smith says on an average day in winter 10 cars are towed away during the two-hour period and in summer the number is doubled. Drivers are fined $10, of which $4.70 is paid to the towing company.

Since last fall Totem has had the lucrative BCAA contract and handles an average 40 calls a day. The company receives a flat $8.50 for each call.

Gordon's looks after about 95 per cent of the parking lots in Victoria.

No one is immune from being towed away. When Dave Barrett was premier he had his car removed from the Empress Hotel parking lot. The same happened to singer Susan Jacks.

The impounding charge is fixed by bylaw at $14. Some of the firms tack on an additional dollar, a part-day storage rate. The full-day storage rate is set at $2, again by bylaw.

Essler says he has applied to city hall for an increase in the charges to $20 tow-away and $2.50 a day storage.

He justifies the hikes on two grounds. First, the rate in Vancouver and Nanaimo is $25 and second, operating costs are skyrocketing.

He says the city business licence fee has gone up more than 900 per cent in the past year, from $30 to $280. And the federal customs duty on new vehicles jumped 30 per cent last month. A new truck —they are all made in Tennessee — cost about $13,800 last summer; this year the price is more than $18,000.

Caton says the 20 to 30 full-time drivers in Greater Victoria want to improve their image with the public.

"Everyone's got the idea we're a bunch of bastards," he says. "Well, we would like to change that, change it in a way that people aren't so scared of us all the time."

Gov't Aid Sought On Water

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Saanich Mayor Ed Lum today called for provincial government assistance in alleviating a severe water shortage in Elk and Beaver Lakes.

"The water level is the lowest it's ever been at this time of year. It would take seven inches of steady rain to bring it back to normal," Lum said. "Central Saanich is pumping out water at the maximum it's allowed under permit . . . 1.3 million gallons a day."

He said fish fingerlings in Saanich's Colquitz water system are also in danger.

"We have to let out 100,000 gallons per day for the fingerlings in the Colquitz system but we are now only able to use 53,000 gallons because of the drying level of the lake," he said.

Lum said he talked with Victoria Mayor Mike Young and asked him, as chairman of the Greater Victoria Water Board, to appeal to municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis for help.

"The solution is to run a temporary line from the Greater Victoria water board's main line, about 1,600 feet away, to the Elk Lake pumphouse," Lum said. "If the minister meant what he said when he formed the Saanich Peninsula Water Commission, he should show some good faith in speeding up work on the temporary line."

Lum said the government should assist the financing of the line.

"I've already requested from my ministry that they investigate the situation," Curtis told the Times. "I'm hoping to have more information for Mayor Young as soon as I can."

"We did talk about it and I indicated I would do whatever I can," he said. "The more warnings we can sound now the better. I understand the Greater Victoria watershed is satisfactory but Vancouver Island, the Saanich Peninsula and the southern coast should all be practising our own voluntary measures (to preserve water)."

Jim Cumming, chairman of the Saanich Peninsula Water Commission, agrees with Lum that a temporary line connecting peninsula communities to the Greater Victoria water system may be the solution.

"But that is a matter for the regional board, if there is a hardship," he said. "The engineers would have to assess the situation. It could make a difference."

He said his commission has been waiting since Jan. 18 to meet the Greater Victoria authorities.

"I understand they have a meeting on Feb. 25," he added.

Not willing to concede that Lum is correct in stating there is an emergency situation, Cumming said the problem is compounded by the fact Sidney wells are running dry and the township has been forced to buy water from Central Saanich.

Cummung said the government's edict in January that Central Saanich also service the Brentwood waterworks may be aggravating the problem.

Central Saanich's waterworks superintendent Gary Rogers said his department has been putting water into the Brentwood quarry (reservoir) for the past two weeks.

"It's a slow process to fill a hole like that," he said, "In the second week of January there was a 30-foot hole. It's now about 15 feet."

He said Sidney normally only has to buy water from Central Saanich during September and October and, perhaps, part of November. Because of the lack of rain, Sidney has had to buy water regularly since last September.

Saanich Data Firm Given Nod

Saanich's finance committee recommended Wednesday a Saanich company be awarded a contract to provide the municipality with its own computer system.

The committee will recommend to council that Datatech Milcron, 4960 Quadra, get a $208,914 contract to provide and install the equipment and programming.

Frank Keeling, executive assistant to Mayor Ed Lum and municipal administrator Bill Tremayne, said today the financing will be arranged through a short-term capital loan, spread over five years.

He said the system will be installed over three years. The entire cost, including such items as freight, maintenance and a small contingency fund will amount to $249,088.

The next meeting of council's personnel committee will review the hiring of a data processing manager.

Keeling said the in-house computer system will be operated under comptroller-treasurer Roy Broughton's department.

Saanich now uses bookkeeping machines in the municipal hall and pays $50,000 annually for three contracts with the data centre that cover property taxes, the payroll and the voters' list.

Sewage 'Strangling' Ganges; Businessmen Ask CRB Help

Two businessmen from Ganges made an impassioned plea Wednesday for help before the Capital Region Board, claiming their Salt Spring Island village is strangling in its own sewage.

Sewage leaking into ditches near school and hospital as well as in many back yards has led Dr. Allan Arneil, regional health officer, to prohibit any more building until a sewer system is built, directors were told.

The sewage problem in Ganges was first declared a health hazard in 1964. But now "it's terribly serious."

"We've got a village that's sick and it's tired and it's on the way to its demise," said Les Ramsey, partner in a Ganges drug store.

He and Tom Toynbee, who operates a building supplies store in the village, brought along a jar of murky water ("it stinks") as evidence, as well as pictures of such sights as a closed-down laundry, a burned-out house and another house "rustic to say the least."

Ganges has a development plan but it's contingent on having a sewer system. With the current ban on any building in the village, scattered development is springing up elsewhere on the island, contrary to the plan, the board was told.

"At the present time Ganges is going nowhere, it's rotting," said Toynbee.

"I can take you to a dozen places where sewage is bubbling up through the ground," said director George Heinekey, who represents Salt Spring Island on the board.

There's a plan to solve the problem before the provincial government now, a sewage collection and treatment system estimated to cost $2.2 million. The treatment plant is a new design and the province is being asked to fund it as a pilot project.

Two years ago the Pollution Control Board rejected a plan which called for an outfall into shallow harbor waters. The treatment plant proposed would leave effluent no longer a hazard.

"It's clear that whatever plan the Pollution Control Board would be willing to approve would be beyond the capability of the ratepayers to pay for," said board chairman Jim Campbell.

What Ramsey and Toynbee asked of the board was permission to use temporary holding tanks and get on with some closely-controlled building in the village. They also want the board to help take their case to various departments of government and underline its urgency.

Directors were told Arneil has said "no" to the interim holding tanks. That question was referred to the Community health services committee.

But the board will do its best to get the province moving on the proposed collection system and pilot treatment plant.

Craig McCaw and his pet camera

Hot Results from Unique 'Cold Camera'

He solved it with a "cold camera," and incidentally saved himself at least $150.

McCaw, of H. R. MacMillan Planetarium, demonstrated his cold camera technique to the Victoria centre, Royal Astronomical Society of Canada Wednesday at the Dominion Astrophysical Observatory.

Amateur astronomers aspiring to take high quality pictures of the stars can profit from McCaw's method, using about $6 worth of ordinary materials they can assemble themselves.

Before his lecture he explained the cold camera as a technique developed by a talented American high school student who made the method available to amateurs.

Taking photographs through telescopes is made much more efficient by lowering the temperature of film, rendering the image-making emulsion hypersensitive. An ideal coolant is dry ice.

Astronomers have devised some sophisticated ways of using the ice, effectively dropping film temperature to around —109F. (—92 C.). But invariably an unwanted side effect results, the condensation of air on the optics or the film itself due to the disparity between room temperature and the chilled film.

One way of avoiding the moisture has been to use a vacuum container, with tubes, seals, pump and motor — a costly arrangement that makes portability awkward.

McCaw's cold camera has a small plastic container for chopped dry ice, a flat copper plate for film backing to provide good conductivity and transfer of image, and a plug of plexiglass three inches thick.

The thickness of plexiglass between the film and telescope effectively insulates the cold chamber from the exposed parts, preventing moisture from condensing.

Inside Workers Settle

Victoria's inside workers voted by a margin of almost 90 per cent Wednesday night in favor of a one-year agreement with the city.

The employees, members of Local 388 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, voted 93 to 11 to accept the contract which provides a wage and fringe benefits package of slightly more than six per cent.

Meanwhile, their fellow unionists in seven other CUPE locals, bargaining through a joint committee, have reached an impasse in their talks with the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association.

Talks broke off Tuesday and GVLRA chief negotiator Carl Anshelm said Wednesday he would be requesting a provincial mediator.

Anshelm said today the association had to wait until it had ratified an agreement with Local 388, which it did Wednesday night, and received the proper forms before applying for a mediator.

Times Staff

Federal financial help is anticipated soon to help the Provincial Emergency Program's marine search and rescue organization.

Gerry Hutchinson, PEP's Victoria zone co-ordinator, whose area covers Vancouver Island and Powell River to Bella Coola on the Mainland, says meetings have already taken place to co-ordinate activities between PEP and the proposed Canadian Coast Guard auxiliary.

PEP's marine arm is SAF (Safety Afloat), a group of volunteers ogranized last May by SAF marine rescue chief Cliff Philpot and monitoring chief co-ordinator Bob Charlesworth.

SAF now has 500 members, 200 in this area, and has handled more than 100 search and rescue operations.

A ceiling of $150,000 has been set for the Ministry of Transport's Pacific Coast Guard auxiliary and Hutchinson says some of this money should be used to reimburse the volunteer SAF boaters for gas and oil used during missions.

"They've been in a number of dicey situations," he said. "Up until now the province has been doing the job for the federal people and financing the operation 100 per cent.

"There is no way we can pay by the hour or for wages lost. Some of these people put in as much as 35 hours a week."

In an incident last Saturday, when the Pacific Rescue Co-ordination Centre at CFB Esquimalt contacted SAF to help find a kayak with two people aboard in the Discovery Island area, SAF volunteers worked 20½ hours until the boat was found, Philpot said.

Hutchinson said less than $100 has been paid to Victoria SAF members because they refuse to submit claims. But his department spends thousands of dollars for equipment in such areas as Gold River, Tahsis and Ucluelet.

In Nanaimo, the SAF unit handled 62 incidents during six months in 1976 and $1,237 was paid out by PEP, about $20 per rescue, as well as $2,060 for equipment. Gas and oil costs were also reimbursed.

PEP also covers SAF volunteers for workmen's compensation during search and rescue operations, and has an "interim policy" allowing a maximum of $100 to be paid in compensation if boats are holed or otherwise damaged, Hutchinson said.

Hutchinson said the Coast Guard has agreed only to operate in "bare spots" where there is no SAF service.

PEP civilian pilots are reimbursed for out-of-pocket expenses, Hutchinson said, so the Coast Guard should do the same for SAF members.

"On the air end of it, civilians pilots are federally reimbursed. The SAF people should be the same. I want recognition for these people. They do a damned good job. The RCC and the RCMP are calling these people out constantly," he said.

Hutchinson said he welcomed the coast guard auxiliary.

"We're very happy. We're going to get extra help," he said. "They will be bringing in training and this will expand the service."

Hutchinson made it clear the province has no intention of opting out of its search and rescue obligations.

"We have picked up the bill in many ways and will continue to do so," he said. "We still have a responsibility to look after the people who are here."
